ALUMNI AND FRIENDS OF HAMPDEN-SYDNEY COLLEGE
★ HAD ALREADY SURPASSED THE GOAL BY $600,000.
★ THE FINAL FIGURE WILL BE ANNOUNCED IN JULY.

"The 'experts' said we could not raise more than $35 million. They simply did not understand Hampden-Sydney College... the powerful forces from our past that drive us and our vision for the future that pulls us forward. It is to our deep sense of place in history, to our profound faith in our destined role for centuries to come, and to our abiding love for this College, that we owe the gratifying results of this campaign."

Designed to give practical introductions to abstract concepts, several innovative courses at Hampden-Sydney have captured student imaginations.

Caveman Chemistry and Hemingway Trenches

By Eunice Carwile '93, with Richard Farley '97

"The difference here is motivation. They don't learn about reactions simply because they've reached that chapter in the book. They learn about them because they want to understand more about gunpowder."

KEVIN DUNN
Chemistry professor

THE ACADEMIC CATALOGUE LISTS the course officially as Chemistry 103, "Chemical Concepts in a Technological Society." It is designed to give non-science majors a practical grounding in basic scientific concepts—without any of the suspicion of easiness to which earlier "chemistry-for-classicists" courses were inevitably subject. But Professor Kevin Dunn's alchemy has turned Chemistry 103 into "Caveman to Chemist," which requires students to learn chemistry in a very practical way—from scratch, by hand.

Students must complete certain fundamental experiments, and they are tested on concepts and methodology. But the course is really about mastering increasingly complicated "technologies." In the words of the syllabus, they "start with building a fire and move up to semiconductors." To get an A, a student must successfully complete 15 projects, ranging from pottery-making and weaving to setting up a Web page.

For projects like fire-building and leadsmelting, students are allowed to take the "tribal" approach. If the project is a success, they all get credit; if it fails, they all have to try again. At least one of the tribes camped out all night to keep a fire going hot enough so they could smelt lead.

Senior Joe Kusak, a history major, was amazed that he could make his own soap (he used bacon drippings from a local restaurant). "The stuff was really crude," he admits, "but you could tell what it was. You realize where a lot of things you use every day come from."

"It shows me what actually goes on in the world," Baker Wright, a junior majoring in psychology, says. "Photographs, for instance—what chemicals are on the paper and how they got there. Or why we use ceramics, why aluminum is so cheap. How the yarn in my sweater actually got to be yarn." Wright recalls going out to a sheep farm and learning to spin "nasty, oily, gross wool" into twine with a drop spindle. Some students used their soap to wash away the oil and dirt, then scraped and boiled walnut hulls for the dye.

The class is far more rigorous academically than the students suspect, however. "I tell them that I teach them as little as possible," says Dunn. "But it's really that

I don't teach them anything that they don't need in order to understand the chemistry we're talking about." Half of the students in the course accomplish, almost unknowingly, one of the most difficult tasks in undergraduate chemistry: they balance an oxidation-reduction reaction. "The difference here is motivation," Dunn says. "They don't learn about those reactions simply because they've reached the chapter in the book. They learn about them because they want to understand more about gunpowder."

Dunn himself seems to balance scholarship and experiential learning with a sense of fun. The man who sees teaching as "performance art" starts off a class about, say, electronics and communications by playing John Prine's "Living in the Future." (His class on photography was accompanied by Paul Simon's "Kodachrome"; the one on weaving by Irish folk songs.) Without notes and with many asides, he tells the whole history of electronics, from Volta to Netscape, explaining diodes, triodes, and solid state technology. At the end he shows his "toys." Students watch, amused, as a tiny robot moves noisily across the floor, blasting fire from its ray gun as another, more sophisticated, model follows a black line in front of the lectern.

At lecture's end, students line up to turn in their completed projects and get advice from their professor. Then Dunn is off to the lab to help two of them make a battery with grapefruits. "The advantage to this experiment," Dunn quips as he shows Ritter Jonas '99 and Wes Whitaker '99 the best location for the ten-penny nail, "is that you can eat the grapefruit afterward." Jonas and Whitaker grin, and get back to the work at hand.

And Hemingway's Trenches

WHILE students in Dunn's chemistry class were moving from caveman culture to the Computer Age, sixteen students in Professor Lawrence Martin's "Literature of War" were getting a small taste of the real thing, by digging World-War-One-type trenches. Martin offers students the option to build trenches, as a substitute for one of the course's required papers.

Trying to follow historically accurate methods, the students were surprised by the amount of work required. "We realized after the first couple of feet what a pain building these things were," said Chris Buck. "After a few feet of clay, the ground became extremely hard. There was also a real problem with cave-ins." The Hampden-Sydney students reinforced their trenches with lumber to prevent cave-ins, just as soldiers did in the fields of France in 1917. The modern copies also included a parapet and were edged with sandbags, barbed wire, and punji sticks. Senior Mike Patrick learned to sympathize with his doughboy predecessors. "We had shovels; they just had spades," he said. "We could always go back to the dorm and get a shower and a warm meal, but some of the soldiers lived in those trenches for over three years."

After the physical labor, students had to submit research summaries on the history of trench warfare, as well as reports on their own trenching experience. "You do chemistry lab to understand chemistry, and we do this to understand 1914-1918," Martin said. "We don't simply read the text."

Constancy through change

ERLENE BOWMAN
Bookstore Head Cashier

COOKIE SEAMSTER CAME TO Hampden-Sydney College in July 1967, several months before the Pennsylvania Station eagle was delivered to Hundley Stadium. She remembers having been "amazed" at the bird's great weight, three tons. "Of course," she says now, "it probably doesn't weigh that much anymore. It's been sandblasted quite a few times." She smiles, knowing that her reference to the eagle's tribulations, especially after certain football games, is understood.

Seamster is one of a handful of members of the College's staff and administration who have been around long enough to witness phenomena like the eagle's arrival (and its weight loss). She, Erlene Bowman, James Edward Crawley, Roberta Crawley, Lewis Drew '60, John Waters '58, and Florence Watson have shown up for work regularly—each for thirty years or more—and watched the College grow. Like Hampden-Sydney's faculty, these staff members and administrators are people whom students have related to and learned from; they have formed part of this College's "whole circle of education." And they have come to know more than anyone what the real Hampden-Sydney College is.

Of course, they talk about change. When Seamster began to work as a secretary in the College's library, for instance, she typed on an old manual typewriter; it was with relief that she witnessed the arrival of the first electric. Now she regularly checks her electronic mail through the College's computing network.

When Florence Watson came to work in 1962, she had to catch a ride from Farmville every day; she had no driver's license or car. (One of her first purchases was a '53 Chevy.) Now the College's Registrar, she remembers when faculty members would record students' grades on cards. Once, she received a card from Latin professor Graves Thompson '27 that had a "peculiar mark" in place of the student's grade for the course. When she asked Dr. Thompson to explain the mark, he told her, "I couldn't decide what grade to give that young man, so I thought I would leave it up to you."

Although class schedules, course offerings, and grades are now kept on computer, Watson still considers hers a personal service.

Another obvious change is that the number of students has increased, growing from about 400 in 1962 to more than 900. "It's a different school now, in that regard, at least," says Alumni Director John Waters '58, who returned to Hampden-Sydney in 1965 to be the school's Registrar. "Everybody knew each other then. Now, a student might know everybody in his fraternity, not everybody in the College." But the advantage of a larger student body, Waters contends, is that the College is able to offer a broader curriculum and more academic support systems—greater quantity brings greater quality.

Cookie Seamster (right) has been a friendly face in the library for 30 years. Erlene Bowman (above) greets bookstore customers with a warm smile.

Also pressing on the College are changes outside the institution. Today's students come from a society very different from that earlier students knew—or, as Dean of Students Lewis Drew '60 puts it, "they come from a world that has given up on inculcating values." Drew, who has been an employee of Hampden-Sydney College for more than 34 years, was a student here for four. In the late '50s, he recalls, young people grew up in stable, close-knit communities with shared beliefs and values. In contrast, today's more chaotic society offers less support or direction. As a result, students are less trusting, knowledgeable about some things but untaught about others: some know more about alcohol use, for instance, than about responsibility and interpersonal relationships. Erlene Bowman, head cashier in the Bookstore and known to scores of students as "Mom," says that the young men who come into the store now are only a little more wary than the ones who came to see her a couple of decades ago in the College Shop, the Bookstore's forerunner. "They're not as friendly when they first come. But after a while, they open up. It's almost as if they're waiting to see if we're going to be friendly," she explains.

WHAT THE COLLEGE HAS BEEN able to offer these students, even through the inevitable changes, is a sense of community, the one constant these veterans refer to the most often. While admitting that there is less time these days "to do extra things for students and faculty members," Watson still considers Hampden-Sydney "a friendly place where people unite with the community to make students feel welcome." Having worked for seven registrars and seven presidents, in offices on every floor of Atkinson Hall, Watson feels that the College is a "second home"; when she doesn't come to work, she wonders "what's going on." Seamster thinks often of "kids growing up free and safe here." She carries with her the image of children of faculty and staff "playing in the snow with their sleds and dogs" on the hill behind the Library. And Bowman draws some of her strength from her job: "You can feel down," she says, "and come in here and one of the students will say, 'I need a hug, Mom,' and then everything is all right again. You've got a purpose and somebody needs you."

It was the feeling of community that drew John Waters back in 1965. He was teaching history and coaching in Richmond in 1964, when he and his wife-to-be, Sally, took a leisurely drive to Hampden-Sydney. The campus was green and quiet. "I saw [Coach] Stokeley Fulton cutting the grass on the football field," he recalls. John became the College's registrar, and Sally went to work for Joseph T. Trotter '35, the alumni director. John, after a stint as director of admissions, became alumni director in 1980. "I feel I have found my niche, and I'm lucky to have found it at my alma mater," Waters says of his life here. "It's been a good place for our family to grow up. We've had good friends in the community, with children the same age as ours. And there are still people here, both faculty and staff, who genuinely care about other people and about the students."

Perhaps, though, James Edward Crawley and Roberta Crawley (not related to each other except through their devotion to Hampden-Sydney) know as much as anyone about working and living at the College. James Edward was born about four miles from campus. He sought a part-time job at the College as soon as he looked old enough to be hired because he "didn't want to impose" on his widowed mother. Now Supervisor of Housekeeping, he considers Hampden-Sydney "a neighborhood, like family." Although he has been a witness to racism, he has not been its victim; when the county's schools closed in 1959, he attended a learning center set up at Mercy Sear Baptist Church (some H-SC professors helped to pay for transportation), and later studied at a Lutheran school in Lunenburg County run by Dr. Donald Ortner's church. "Sometimes, among new students especially, there has been what I would call racism," he says. "But it's never been directed towards me. I think we've made progress in that area, too. My brother Ralph (who has been working at Hampden-Sydney for a mere 25 years) was the first black fire chief that I know of in the four counties our fire department serves." There was "no resentment, none whatsoever" when James Edward became a supervisor several years ago, and rousing applause at Commencement in 1993 when he won the College's Robert Thruston Hubard Award for service and dedication. "The Hubard Award was an honor for me and my mother," he recalls. "She passed away a year or two after that. And the day I got that award was Mother's Day. And the way President Wilson introduced me that day. . . well, it made me proud to be a part of this community."

Roberta (Bert) Crawley, a nurse in the Moore Student Health Center who has lived at Hampden-Sydney since 1955 and worked here since 1966, often says, "A lot of people get to MCV [The Medical College of Virginia] by way of Hampden-Sydney, but I came to Hampden-

Sydney by way of MCV." The Florala, Alabama, native got to know the College when she was a nursing student and scrub nurse for the chief of staff of surgery at MCV: "Dr. Bigger liked to get students from Hampden-

Sydney," she recalls. "He often said, 'Give me a Hampden-Sydney kid with a B.A. and we'll give him his sciences.'" But it was through another nursing student that she met T. Edward (Ned) Crawley, Jr., '41, who was teaching English and directing the Glee Club at the College. When Ned brought her to Hampden-Sydney for a visit in 1949, she was "enchanted." ("I still am," she adds.) After they came back to Hampden-Sydney in 1955 to stay, Bert managed to entertain students, glee clubs, and musicians, while working full-time at the local hospital. They had "a house full of music, all the time" and sometimes had to sleep on the floor of their library. She left the hospital and came to work at Hampden-Sydney's infirmary in 1966. When her husband died in 1984, she gave no truck to self-pity, but felt sorry instead for "all the students who would never have him, never know him, never see him walking down the street." She stayed on in "Thornton Place" and continued to work for the College. She has made Hampden-Sydney her home, taking long walks through the "early-morning sounds," watching the sun come up over the Field House, and looking after the students who come into the Health Center. "Hampden-Sydney has been my life since I married Ned," she declares. "I'm very fortunate to have been Mrs. Crawley and to have been at Hampden-Sydney all this time. It has let me continue to be me."

But the Crawleys and the others never forget why they are here and have been here: the young men who enter the College gates as wide-eyed and nervous freshmen and, with their help, leave four years later, wiser and stronger. Dean of Students Lewis H. Drew sees the College's mission, "to form good men and good citizens in an atmosphere of sound learning," as his own to live by and live up to. "We want the students to see that the way we conduct our professional lives is consistent with the ideas embodied in that mission," he reminds us all. As dean—an around-the-clock job since 1970—he has helped young men, directly and by example, to learn about "the broad purposes of discipline" and how to set their own standards for responsible behavior. For him, the work is the fulfillment of his purpose in life, "to have a part in helping to form better people."

Self-fulfillment and selfless service, constancy through change: among this College's faculty, staff, and administration, heroes can be found. The College's greatest asset is not the beautiful campus, the Federal-style architecture, or the twenty-first-century technology in the midst of it all. Hampden-Sydney's true strength resides in people like Cookie Seamster, Florence Watson, John Waters, Erlene Bowman, Bert Crawley, James Edward Crawley, and Lewis Drew, who have each given the College 30 years or more of hard work and dedication, and have served as examples to students and to the rest of us—simply by doing their jobs. And like the Pennsylvania Station eagle—a little worse for wear, after thirty years or so, perhaps—they represent what endures.

JAMES N. BOYD '58
Fellow of the College in the Natural Sciences, 1997

On March 10, 1997, five alumni who have distinguished themselves in academic endeavors were inducted as Fellows of the College: Mr. James N. Boyd '58, Dr. Walter Randolph Chitwood, Jr. '68, and Mr. William L. McLaughlin '49 were named Fellows of the College in the Natural Sciences. Dr. W. Keith Eubank, Jr. '42 was named a Fellow of the College in the Social Sciences; and Dr. Richard McIlwaine Frazer '52 was named a Fellow of the College in the Humanities. Boyd is Chairman of the Math Department, St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Chitwood is professor of surgery and chairman at the East Carolina University School of Medicine and Pitt County Memorial Hospital in Greenville, North Carolina; McLaughlin is a research physicist with the National Institute of Standards and Technology in Gaithersburg, Maryland; Eubank is a professor emeritus of history at Queens College of the City University of New York; and Frazer is professor emeritus of classics at Tulane University in New Orleans.

During their visit, the inductees gave a public lecture on their area of study and spoke informally with students about Hampden-Sydney's impact on their careers and about how current students could follow in similar paths.

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S, A PRIVATE high school in Richmond, has "exceptionally strong ties with Hampden-Sydney," says James N. Boyd '58, who is in his thirty-first year there, teaching mathematics and statistics. At St. Christopher's, he was chairman of the mathematics department from 1968 to 1995 and has also chaired the science department.

"When I attended St. Christopher's," Boyd recalls, "the headmaster, Robert W. Bugg, two successive senior masters, Benjamin S. Morgan and John R. Brinser, the director of athletics, Hugh Brenaman, two of my math teachers, Dave Boney—the brother of Nash Boney—and Ambrose Vulcan, and John C. Beckwith, my physics teacher—they were all Hampden-Sydney people. And I believe I was really meant to go on to the University of Virginia as well because of all of its Hampden-Sydney connections."

"In those years, a steady stream of young men exchanged the Red and Gray of the Saints for the Red and Gray of the Tigers."

"When I first came to Hampden-Sydney," Boyd continues, "the College stood four-square in the liberal arts tradition. There was really no system for having an academic major; whether you took a B.A. or a B.S., all of the courses were essentially the same. Even a B.S. had to have two years of ancient language, two years of a modern foreign language, two years of English, at least one year of history, two years in the study of the Old and New Testaments, and a year of either philosophy or psychology. That was a very significant thing in Hampden-Sydney education. I wouldn't change a thing, because I believe the liberal arts tradition is the way education should be."

"In mathematics," Boyd explains, "we are constantly making definitions, so that a single word may carry a load of meaning which is independent of who is speaking and who is hearing the word. There must be a core of material common to educated men and women so that they may converse, if for no other reason."

"Specialization can wait. Graduates who later became doctors, lawyers, ministers and priests, teachers, men of commerce, engineers, and men of leisure should possess this common core of knowledge."

Did the system work? In 1958 or so, Boyd recalls, the American Association of Physics Teachers published a ranking of American colleges by the percentage of its graduates having earned advanced degrees in physics: Hampden-Sydney led the list.

The Hampden-Sydney connection continues for Boyd. His son Leo is a graduate of Hampden-Sydney and of the University of Virginia law school. "My son-in-law, too, William Reed McGuire, is a graduate of Hampden-Sydney and is also teaching at St. Christopher's."

When Boyd first came to Hampden-Sydney from Richmond, he found himself in a "very natural place" because he came from a family of teachers. (On his mother's side of the family, he is a fifth-generation teacher in independent secondary schools in Virginia.) "I grew up in a family that read, talked about books at the dinner table, valued education and learning, told and retold stories about teachers and teaching, prized the eccentricities of school life, and laughed over and over again at the anecdotes illustrating those eccentricities."

He and John Waters, the College's director of alumni relations, were roommates. "Johnny was a Pika and I was a KA. Toward the end of our junior year, we had agreed to live in our respective fraternities for the next year. Independently, though, we each decided that living in a fraternity house was not such a good idea. The solution was obvious: we would room together." Boyd's senior year was his happiest, he recalls.

Boyd was graduated summa cum laude from Hampden-Sydney in 1958. He obtained an M.S. in physics (1960) and an M.A. in mathematics (1972) from the University of Virginia. He also has an M.S. in mathematics from Virginia Commonwealth University (1977). He was also an NSF instructor in physics at the University of Virginia from 1962 to 1963. He served as an instructor in physics at the University of Richmond (1963—1966), before moving to St. Christopher's in 1966, where he has been ever since.

He still collaborates with his thesis advisor, writing about mathematics. He and a colleague, P. N. Raychowdhury of VCU, co-authored an article, "Biased Random Walks," in the Virginia Journal of Science (Spring 1995). "Sampling Distributions from Polynomial Multiplication" appeared in the International Journal of Mathematical Education in Science and Technology (May 1995), published in England. Boyd's "Professor Bear" cartoons have appeared in numerous publications.

Boyd has been recognized as an outstanding educator by the Virginia Commonwealth University chapter of Phi Delta Kappa (1988). In a typical day at St. Christopher's, Boyd teaches ninth-grade geometry and pre-calculus; he teaches calculus and statistics to seniors. For the future, he sees more of the same for himself, teaching and pursuing the academic matters he loves. "It may seem boring," he says, "but it is a lucky man who is paid to do what he wants to do; I am such a man. I have never made any sort of sacrifice to go into the classroom. It is, I believe, my natural habitat."

ALTHOUGH HE IS DEEPLY involved in several different aspects of cardiac medicine, Dr. Walter Randolph Chitwood, Jr. '68 prefers to define four major areas of concentration: administration, teaching, basic science, and clinical work.

At Hampden-Sydney in March, when he was inducted as a Fellow of the College in the Natural Sciences, he chose to concentrate on speaking about his clinical work, especially his clinical research. "We are developing new techniques to perform minimally invasive open-heart surgery, in which we are making smaller and smaller incisions, placing tiny cameras inside the heart, to replace or repair valves."

The less-invasive surgery, in the vanguard of today's "kinder, gentler" heart operations, requires a high level of skill among surgeons because they must cut, probe, operate, and sew from a greater distance, using specially designed, longer precision instruments.

Heart surgery, in the view of some of today's doctors, is a streamlined procedure, with the risks minimized; the emphasis now is on making the patient feel better as quickly as possible. For Chitwood, whose family has a history of heart disease and who himself a couple of years ago underwent quadruple bypass surgery, this emphasis is paramount. He realized of course that after his own operation he would be away from work for several weeks, but he was surprised at how much the surgery drained him. "What's more," Chitwood said, "it hurt."

In the less invasive technique for a heart bypass, surgeons at East Carolina University and elsewhere now cut a 2.5-inch incision and remove a portion of a rib. Chitwood has also developed a revolutionary technique to repair the mitral valve, which controls blood flow between the two chambers of the heart: a 10-millimeter video camera, inserted into the chest through an incision as small as 2.7 centimeters, the size of the valve itself, lets surgeons view the heart magnified thirteen times on a video monitor. Then, using tiny instruments, they surgically modify the valve. All of this is accomplished without the trauma of cutting through the sternum and opening the rib cage. As accessories for this procedure, Chitwood has designed a miniature forceps and a clamp-on napkin.

"We are using these new technologies to lessen trauma to the patient as well as to be more cost effective," Chitwood says. "What's just as important as rapid recovery is rapid restoration to normal activities. It takes some basic studies in cardiac preservation—learning how to preserve the heart during these operations."

"All these developments start in the research laboratory," Chitwood adds, "and also from partnering with industry. To have access to the talents of engineers in private industry—mechanical engineers, electrical engineers, lighting engineers—this is what is so important. It is emerging as a very important basis of cardiac surgery in the United States." Chitwood and his team are preeminent in the area. "It's the first time that some of this type of heart surgery has been done."

Chitwood's work causes him to travel frequently. He is on numerous editorial boards and lecture committees. Because he teaches medical students, he admits that he has "no discretionary time—every moment I have is on a three-by-five card. But I enjoy it."

Did "Ranny" Chitwood foresee such an active life for himself when he was at Hampden-Sydney? "Actually," he says, "I was pretty laid back, but people who know me know I was intense in a few areas, in photography, for instance. I did photography for the Kaleidoscope and for the Tiger for four years. I photographed weddings and graduations, had a little business, was really good at it. I even used to exhibit in the Eastman Gallery. I won an award with the photo I took of Francis [Randolph] the Axeman. When Francis the Axeman died, they used that photo on the program at Mercy Seat Baptist Church; I had shown it to his sister when Francis was admitted to the hospital. I also took many football action shots for the Richmond Times-Dispatch and for the Roanoke Times—in fact, I almost went into photography."

Almost everything Chitwood has done in the past he feels is applicable to what he is doing today. "I had what I think was the first student amateur radio station at Hampden-Sydney. I learned engineering principles from the electronics I encountered, which I now apply to hemodynamics and patient care." His other avocation is writing a history of surgery and physiology.

At Duke he went through the longest surgical residency program in the United States—ten years—where attention to detail is "drummed into the residents." Research can be frustrating, Chitwood grants, "but it is satisfying. And I always return to my Hampden-Sydney roots for the compassion, for the bedside manner. . . ."

The East Carolina University School of Medicine—Pitt County Memorial Hospital, where Chitwood chairs the department of surgery, has the second largest cardiovascular center in North Carolina after Duke. He has a nationally recognized research laboratory, with excellent clinicians and surgeons and a supportive staff. He still performs 200 open-heart surgeries a year.

"The next fifty years will be the most exciting of the millennium," Chitwood promises. His enthusiasm is infectious. "Now, we're mapping the genome, there is gene engineering, gene splicing. It's like rock 'n roll—it's here to stay," he told Hampden-Sydney students during his visit. "These are exciting times—we're literally nanoseconds away from whatever is needed. This is a time for you to flourish. It's up to you," he impressed on them, "Hampden-Sydney can act as a blueprint."

Chitwood has always admired Sir William Osler (1849—1919), a Canadian who touted a "master word" in medicine. "Though a little one, the master word looms large in meaning. It is the open-sesame to every portal, the great equalizer in the world, the true philosopher's stone which transmutes all the base metal of humanity into gold." "By means of it," Chitwood continues for Osler, "all things are possible. It is responsible for the past 25 years of advances in medical science, so it is pretty important. The word is work."

WHEN W. KEITH EUBANK, JR. '42, professor emeritus of history at Queens College in New York, first came to Hampden-Sydney, as World War II was about to foam up from Munich, he wanted to become an opera singer—a goal that his teen-aged children would later find uproariously funny. Instead, in the new climate of nationalistic aggression, he found himself drawn to European diplomatic history.

Thus he wrote a column for the Tiger on foreign affairs. "Having to write something every week, to fill that space every week," Eubank acknowledges, "was excellent discipline." Then he edited the Garnet in his senior year. The Hampden-Sydney training was the foundation, he says, that helped shape his writing throughout his lifetime.

Graduating magna cum laude from Hampden-Sydney in 1942, Eubank earned a Master's from Harvard in 1947 and a doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania in 1951. He proceeded to teach and write on European diplomatic history, beginning with Paul Cambon, an important figure in World War I, and then focused on some of the diplomatic meetings during World War II.

"It was difficult to get my first book published," he recalls, "because of the topic—a French diplomat [Cambon] is not 'hot stuff' in American academia.

I learned a lesson." But the University of Oklahoma Press did eventually publish his Cambon work in 1960, with some help from the Ford Foundation. (They also published two other quite successful works of his, Munich, in 1963, and The Summit Conferences, 1919-1960, in 1966.)

He has written a short history of the atomic bomb, with the direct title The Bomb (1991), an outgrowth of plans for a multi-media course on World War II at Queens. Even though he says he "had only one course on physics while at Hampden-Sydney," he was able "to take the topic all the way up until modern times when the Russians exploded their bomb." The history of the A-bomb is uniquely clear, Eubank points out, "because the Americans and the Russians have gotten together and discussed it, and so you have both sides."

At present he is working on the third edition of A Survey of Historic Costume, co-authored with Phyllis Tortora, to be published this year by Fairchild Publications, the publisher of Women's Wear Daily. In his eighteenth year as chairman of the history department of Queens College, just as he was preparing for retirement, he was contacted by Tortora, the chair of the home economics department. She was looking for someone to write a technical history of clothing, civilization, and material, and she wanted Eubank to recommend someone. "How about me?" he offered. "It has been very interesting ever since," he smiles. The textbook is popular with college home economics and drama departments and with museums, while the quality of the illustrations give the text general-audience coffee-table appeal.

As co-author of the work, Eubank has researched some fascinating subjects, from a contemporary's description of Charlemagne's costume to a list of Napoleon's clothing and its cost in French francs at the time, which then had to be converted into modern equivalents. He also helped to update the third edition by writing about the Internet with some help, he acknowledges, from his daughter, who teaches computing.

He is also under contract to produce a book on the Cuban missile crisis, "trying to make sense of that event." Under the Freedom of Information Act, more information has recently become available as President's Kennedy's tapes of sessions of meetings of the Executive Committee of the National Security Council are declassified and made public.

Coming to Hampden-Sydney from Philadelphia in the 1930s, Eubank was "struck by the closeness and the warmth and the small classes." Today when he visits, he still "marvels at the sight of all of the cars" because, when he attended, there were of course "very few students who drove. People used to walk to town, and there was much more hitchhiking."

Eubank tells today's students that "you don't realize it now, but these are the best four years of your life." He urges them to enjoy the time spent here while they can because later will come the task of earning a livelihood. "Yes," Eubank affirms, "these are definitely the years that count."

ONE OF THE PLEASURES OF being a classics professor," according to Dr. Richard McIlwaine ("Mac") Frazer, Jr. '52, a 1997 Fellow of the College in the Humanities, "is living in Greece and Italy." The warm colors of the Italian buildings appeal to Frazer, who is retired in New Orleans and paints every day; indeed two of the colors in his present palette, colors he avers that he cannot do without, are "burnt siena and raw siena—Italian earth colors."

When Frazer left the College as a young graduate in 1952, he had no idea what he wanted to do. "I had thought of the classics as a possible life for myself in teaching," he recalls. "I had in effect majored in classics at Hampden-Sydney, and had taken German, which is practically a requirement for being able to read the scholarship on Latin and Greek." He liked Hesiod then, too, and Mr. Firenze, a Hampden-Sydney teacher he admired very much, told him he should become a teacher. Frazer tucked away Firenze's advice, but, "not knowing what better to do," volunteered for the Army. He landed in the Korean War just after Truman had fired MacArthur; he served three years.

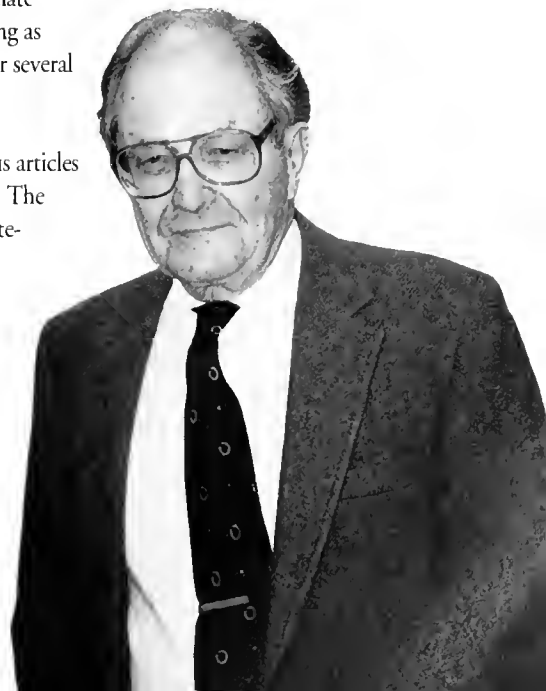

After Korea, he enrolled in T. C. Williams law school for a year and a half—because, he explains, there was the precedent of "an uncle and a grandfather who were also lawyers." Then, on Dr. Graves H. Thompson's advice, he went to North Carolina to graduate school. From there he went to Tulane in 1959, which was to be his first and last job: he progressed from instructor to assistant professor to associate professor to full professor in 1977, acting as chairman of the Classics department for several years. He worked at Tulane until his retirement.

He wrote three books and numerous articles while there, all connected with Homer. The first, published in 1966, analyzes the late-classical epics purportedly by Dictys of Crete and Dares the Phrygian, "Latin poems based on Greek originals, which are anti-Homeric in their stance but were very popular in the Middle Ages," he explains. "Their version of the Trojan saga gave rise to the Troilus and Cressida story, which resurfaces in Chaucer—and in Shakespeare and Boccaccio, too."

"Having to write something every week, to fill that space [in the Tiger] every week, was excellent discipline."

His other books have primarily been translation commentaries, as when he wrote on the poet Hesiod in 1983. He also did an analysis of the Iliad. Frazer is drawn to Hesiod and Homer by the “freedom with which they reworked the mythological traditions they inherited.”

Now, Frazer is “outdoors in New Orleans every day, painting old houses. My interest in art has always gone along with my interest in the classics, especially when trying to find illustrations for some of the classical pieces.” This research has taken him to Greece, where he has photographed Greek farmers, Mount Helicon, and the narrow strait of water between the mainland and the island of Euboea, which “Hesiod said was the farthest he had ever gone by sea.” Frazer has always injected material from his travels into his class lectures.

Rising at five o'clock every day, Frazer paints from about 8:30 am until noon; he says he wants to be “as good a painter as Winslow Homer.” Frazer sells some of his paintings and has donated others to church auctions; he has had two art shows.

He plans to stay in New Orleans, where he has lived in the same house for seventeen years. Even so, he always looks at houses in other places and appears to be “closing in on Richmond,” where, he claims, he is “something of a byword among real estate agents.”

Since retiring, he has not felt a desire to return to teaching; rather, he wants to do something different that excites him, because he feels he “has moved on.” Besides painting, Frazer is presently reading some of the early Church fathers: Tertullian in Latin, Ignatius of Antioch in Greek.

Frazer says that Dr. Graves Thompson was one of the greatest influences on him because of “his steady happy personality and his enjoyment of scholarship. He taught art history, mathematics, and Latin at Hampden-Sydney; he played the organ in church—he was a very sane person.” Another teacher who influenced Frazer was Dr. Denison Maurice Allan, who taught both psychology and philosophy. “I remember taking an aptitude test from him and scoring highest as artist.” Allan wrote a book called The Realm of Personality, which the young Frazer enjoyed tremendously.

Allan was devout as well; Frazer remembers “his sweet reasonableness.” He also corresponded with Allan during the war.

“There are certain people who influence you in life even though you may not know them very well, or you may have an idea of them that may or may not be true.” Frazer cites Dr. McRae (who taught Bible) “whose Germanic austerity impressed me, and made me feel that there were meanings in things beyond what you could imagine—and that was very stimulating.”

“Whatever you do, do your best,” he advises young Hampden-Sydney men today, “with the realization that you can’t be perfect. Be excited by what you’re doing. Get up in the morning, get outdoors, move physically. Doing something physical helps remove stress; swimming or jogging helps settle you. Also, having animals”—he has two cats—is “quite soothing—they are so beautiful and graceful and a part of life. The idea that we are akin to the apes is something I like,” he says confidently: “We have nothing to be ashamed of there.”

“WHEN I ATTENDED HAMPDEN-Sydney, I was blessed in having Professor [Thomas E.] Gilmer,” William L. McLaughlin '49, Fellow of the College in the Natural Sciences, recalls. “He made us realize that there were exciting careers in science and that we ourselves would become exciting.”

McLaughlin went into physics “mainly because Hampden-Sydney had a small department at that time—but then the whole student body was only about 440, and there was a great atmosphere here.” He was graduated summa cum laude in 1949.

“The English courses taught me to write,” he continues. “Ned Crawley made us write extemporaneously: we had to be able to talk about a theme we had written, even though it wasn’t a speech class.” Indeed, today, if he were to sum up his philosophy of life, McLaughlin thinks he would describe it as the “excitement of being extemporaneous from one day to the next.”

In the years after Hampden-Sydney, McLaughlin studied “physics and more physics” at Duke, at the Universität Tübingen, at George Washington University, and at the Enrico Fermi School of Physics, in Varenna, Italy. He was to use the skills he had gained at Hampden-Sydney to write original prose in science, which gave him an edge in his field. He is the author of some 240 scientific papers, seven books (four as editor), and the holder of eight patents.

On this visit to the College, McLaughlin spent some time with Dr. Donald Kniffen, whose students were building short timers out of components bought off the shelf. “The major advantage in coming to a place like Hampden-Sydney,” says McLaughlin, “is the liberal arts, plus the science, and the enthusiasm you find in small classes. . . . Here, not only do you get to make the equipment, but you also get to write the equations that explain how it works.” Thus you understand your tools.

McLaughlin has spent many years as a research physicist at the National Institute of Technology (formerly the National Bureau of Standards) in Gaithersburg, Maryland. He describes his field as “medical physics,” since he plans clinical cancer treatments for notable institutions like Johns Hopkins, the Mayo Clinic, and Boston General. He works primarily with neurosurgeons who are performing “knifeless surgery—they use radiation to treat pituitary tumors, for example, which are very close to the delicate area of the optic nerve, so that the surgeons won’t blind the patient or kill him.” McLaughlin holds a patent on this method and is editor-in-chief of the scientific journal Applied Radiation and Isotopes, which covers the field of nuclear medicine.

He will soon travel to Japan, where he has been called as an expert witness in patent infringement litigation between two corporations. He was part of the original patent team, though he himself is not a litigant.

“But officially,” he smiles, “I retired in April 1996!”

He has also worked extensively in agricultural research and radiation, in particular with the use of radioactive materials to control insect populations. For the Red Cross, he is using radiation to control diseases in the blood supply; one—the potentially fatal post-graft transfusion disease—has been all but obliterated. “Some 10 percent of transfusion recipients develop the illness,” he explains. “It’s caused by the proliferation of white blood cells to the detriment of red blood cells. If scientists irradiate the blood, this disease can be controlled. So now almost all blood banks are using ionizing radiation.”

McLaughlin has also been working on the environmental applications of radiation, specifically to the disposal of hospital waste. In March, he was headed to Miami for the first pilot plant at Cedars Hospital. “This is very exciting,” McLaughlin says, “because radiation renders infectious waste sterile and unrecognizable, so that it can be placed into landfills with no more danger of infection.”

Other areas receiving McLaughlin’s attention:

- Treatment of groundwater that contains toxic metals such as mercury, cadmium, and arsenic. “Some University of Maryland colleagues and I were able to come up with a novel way to precipitate toxic metal salts out of the water supply,” he explains.

- Measurements for radiation accidents, which can occur frequently on a smaller scale than, say, Chernobyl. McLaughlin tells of a scrap metal dealer in Mexico who inadvertently collected some radioactive material, which found its way later into other products. This kind of accident led him to patent a sodium iodide detector to spot radioactive materials at the entrance of scrap yards as trucks pass through.

- A cancer drug based on the principles of physics. The patient takes a non-toxic drug, which settles in the tumor; the tumor is then irradiated, which causes the drug to break down into two toxic compounds which kill the tumor. The effect is “localized in the tumor,” he explains, “and there are no side effects.”

Despite the variety and scope of his research, McLaughlin says that he has not yet achieved all his life goals. There are “some other things that I very much want to do.”

McLaughlin plans to make a recording of all of the folk songs he has collected. He also paints; he has promised so many members of his large extended family a painting that he already “owes about 40 paintings, so I am way behind schedule.”

What does he like to do best? McLaughlin, the physicist who has spent a lifetime defining the fields of science and technology, says he likes best to write poetry: “That started years ago. Under Ned Crawley, I wrote my first poem, and I’ve been writing them ever since.”

Alumni Citation

BEFORE A LARGE CROWD OF FRIENDS and admirers, Joseph J. Trotter '35 of Harrisonburg was given the 1996 Alumni Citation of Hampden-Sydney College. Awarded annually, the award recognizes an alumnus of the College who embodies the characteristics of a humane and lettered man in his life and in his outstanding support of the College. After attending the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, Mr. Trotter was a sales specialist for the Valentine Company of Richmond and later a representative of Bemis Brothers Bag Company in Norfolk, Baltimore, and Pepperell, Massachusetts. Ties with his alma mater were strengthened in 1938 with his marriage to Banna Price Massey, daughter of the legendary professor of Bible, James B. "Snapper" Massey. In 1960, he joined the administration of Hampden-Sydney College and for several years was responsible for fundraising, alumni relations, public relations, and publications, even serving as Acting President during the brief hospitalization of President Gilmer. As the College grew, Mr. Trotter's duties became more focused toward alumni giving and fundraising. Through his efforts, funds were raised for a new science building, Hundley Stadium, Whitehouse Residence Halls, and an addition to Eggleston Library. He spent his last three years, before retiring in 1977, as Assistant to the President and as a Trustee.

Alumni talk careers

FOUR ALUMNI RETURNED to

Hampden-Sydney on Homecoming Weekend to discuss their careers in public service: Noel Bumpas '94 of the Chesapeake Bay Foundation; Bill Barnett '94, with the Defense Intelligence Agency; Ed McMullen '86, who has served on several South Carolina commissions and is now president of a non-profit educational foundation; and Ted Wright '89, who has worked on Capitol Hill and is now a lobbyist in Washington.

Then in December, two more alumni, both math majors—dubbed "the Wilson boys" by a member of the department—returned in December to talk about life after Hampden-Sydney. T. C. Wilson '90 worked as an actuary after graduation and is now a portfolio manager at Wheat First Butcher Singer in Richmond. Page Wilson '90 (not related to T.C.) earned a second B.S. at Virginia Tech and is an engineer at Appalachian Power (a division of American Electric Power) in Roanoke.

UTS Celebration and reunion

TO KICK OFF THE CELEBRATION of the centennial of its move from Hampden-Sydney to Richmond in 1896-98, Union Theological Seminary held its annual its annual faculty retreat on campus of on September 3 and 4. Established as a school of theological education at Hampden-Sydney in the early 19th century, the seminary languished in 1820, was revived in 1824 by John Holt Rice and Jonathan P. Cushing, and moved into what is today called the Stagger Inn of Venable Hall in July 1825. The Synods of Virginia and North Carolina assumed direct control and named the institution Union Theological Seminary in 1826, beginning 70 years of dependency-detachment struggles between the Seminary and the College. The vote, on October 26, 1895, to move the Seminary to Richmond "brought to a climax," says John Brinkley '59 in On This Hill, "a painful train of events." (In 1992, William E. Thompson, College Chaplain, examined the break-up in his doctoral thesis.) In this century, fortunately, the relationship between H-SC and UTS has been more amicable, as this retreat proved.

Elections '96 Symposium

ON SEPTEMBER 23, James W. Kinkaid, a commentator for WVEC-TV, struck the keynote for the College's fall symposium, "Elections '96," with his lecture, "The Role of the Public Media in the American Political Process." Kinkaid, a former ABC Foreign News Correspondent and later News Anchor for WVEC-13 in Hampton Roads, now is a News Commentator for WVEC-TV.

Among the other events in the symposium:

- September 24 - Professor of Biology William A. Shear

President Wilson, Alumni Association President Don Whitley, and Alumni Director John Waters present the Alumni Citation to Joe Trotter '35 (SECOND FROM RIGHT), who has been active both as an alumnus and as an administrator at the College over a busy lifetime.

• September 24 - Professor of Biology William A. Shear and Professor of History James Y. Simms gave an overview of Fifth Congressional District issues and discussed why people vote along party lines.

ELECTION 96

A SYMPOSIUM AT HAMPDEN-SYDNEY COLLEGE

• October 7 - Members of the Young Democrats and Young Republicans staged a mock Presidential debate. Students from Hollins, Randolph-Macon Woman's, Sweet Briar, and Longwood Colleges joined in.

• October 14 - Mark Goodin '78, political strategist and campaign advisor, presented a lecture, "The Candidate: Campaigning vs. Governing."

• October 16 - Faculty and students gathered in the Tiger Inn to watch the real Presidential Debate.

• October 28 - Dr. James Ceasar of the University of Virginia gave a lecture, "The Presidential Selection Process and the Contemporary Campaign."

• November 5, Election Day - Faculty and guests gathered to watch and discuss Election Night coverage.

Three special one-credit-hour courses on parties, elections, and polling, complemented the symposium.

American-Latin American dreams

"THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION and the Revolutionary Americas" examined key issues in current relations between the United States and Latin America. On the first day of the two-day forum in November, five students—Clint Kelly '97, John Green '98, Joel Getz '97, Jody Garliss '99, and Ashley Viberg '98—publicly presented their research papers on the specific connections between the revolution that created the United States and the revolutions that brought into being neighboring nations to the south. On the second day of the event, Dr. Judith Ewell, Professor of Latin-American history at the College of William & Mary, provided a bridge between the American Revolution and current inter-American relations in her lecture, "Angels and Men: The Legacy of the Revolutionary Era in U.S.–Latin American Relations." That evening Professor Ewell joined Ambassador William B. Jones

(former ambassador to Haiti and Visiting Professor of Diplomacy and International Relations at Hampden-Sydney College) and General Frederick Woerner (former Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Army Southern Command in Panama and Professor at the School of International Relations, Boston University) in a panel discussion, "New Problems and Possibilities in U.S.–Latin American Relations," in which the three panelists explored economic and trade relations, border issues, and national security concerns.

The sponsor of the two-day event was The Society of the Cincinnati, an organization created after the Revolutionary War by surviving U.S. officers. The Virginia chapter of the Society supports research and lectures at the state's colleges and universities that foster an awareness of the continuing significance of the American Revolution.

• Michael Rabieh, Olin Fellow and Visiting Assistant Professor of Political Science, gave the first Olin lecture, "Aristotle the Extremist," on Tuesday, November 19.

Shakespeare's Hal

IN NOVEMBER, THE JONGLEURS and the Department of Fine Arts presented a performance of Henry IV, Part I, the second of Shakespeare's history plays about the civil wars in 15th-century England. Unlike most theatre goes at H-SC, the audience witnessed the action of this play from gallery sections set up on either side of Crawley Forum, and even became part of the action at times. Visiting Professor of Theatre Fredric Berg directed; guest artist Jim Hillgartner played Falstaff, with Adam LaVier '97 as Prince Hal; Sam Chiocca '98 as Prince John; Ed Ferguson '00 as Vernon; Jody Garliss '97 as the Sheriff; Michael S. Garrett '99 as Worcester; J. D. Jordan '99 as Peto; Paul Lovelace '99 as Douglas; Paul Owens '00 as Bardolph;

During the Community Picnic in August, ARAMARK food service celebrated its 40th year at Hampden-Sydney. Each of three huge cakes (ABOVE) featured a building in which the dining hall has been located, and the food service director and president of the College at the time.

Winter-Spring 1997

Tropical Storm Fran hit the campus after midnight on Friday, September 6, 1996, knocking out power and the Tiger computer system. Some of the College's trees were casualties, too. The monarch Kentucky coffee tree at the north-eastern corner of Venable Hall (RIGHT) fell onto the building early in the storm. The slate roof was gashed, two chimneys were knocked over, and the stairs to Stagger Inn and the east end of Parents & Friends porch were destroyed. All have been repaired.

Latané's Sword Travels

THE SABRE AND SCABBARD of the legendary Civil War Captain William Latané have been removed from the Esther Thomas Atkinson Museum Gallery for loan in the exhibition "A Woman's War: Southern Women, Civil War and the Confederacy" at The Museum of the Confederacy in Richmond, from September 1996 to September 1997. Latané graduated from Hampden-Sydney's Medical Department (now the Medical College of Virginia) in 1853, and "was the only Confederate casualty in General J.E.B. Stuart's famous 1200- cavalryman ride around General George B. McClellan's entire Federal army in a reconnaissance mission," says the Reverend William E. Thompson. Thompson adds that "Latané's death received more attention than usual because of the wonderful care Confederate sympathizers—all women—gave to the burial of the Captain." Widely publicized by engravings from the original painting entitled "The Burial of Latané," the romantic heroism of this young doctor came to symbolize, as Douglas Southall Freeman later wrote, "the entire Confederate cause."

Lectures & Programs

SEPTEMBER

• Flapper's story

The Lectures & Programs Committee presented Dawn Westbrook's award-winning portrayal of Zelda Fitzgerald in playwright William Luce's one-woman show, Zelda: The Last Flapper. The next day, Westbrook, Dr. Kenneth Campbell (professor of theatre at VCU and director of the play), and professors Tom DeWolfe, Sarah Hardy, and Larry Martin discussed F. Scott Fitzgerald's fiction, the couple's troubled marriage, the Twenties, women's rights, and other issues in the play.

• Ancient Tunis

Susan Stevens of the Department of Classics at Randolph-Macon Woman's College gave an illustrated talk on Bir Frouha. She was joined by students who participated in the dig at ancient Carthage last summer, including Hampden-Sydney's Ben deLee '98.

OCTOBER

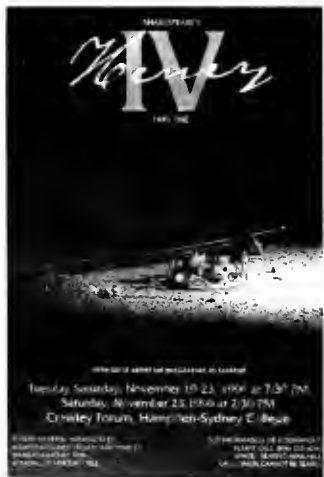

• Epic poet Jill Breckenridge read from Civil Blood, her book-length collection of poetry and prose about her ancestor, Confederate general John Cabell Breckinridge.

• The Philosophy Club and Lectures & Programs sponsored two (non-ghostly) talks on Halloween. Professor Marjorie Hass presented "Varieties of Negation: the Logic of Radical Difference," and her husband, Professor Lawrence Hass, presented "Heidegger, Plato, and 'The Question of Essence.'" The Hasses are a "dynamic philosophical tag-team" from Muhlenberg College in Allentown, Pennsylvania.

NOVEMBER

• The younger Wilson of military fame—Samuel V. Wilson, Jr.—lectured on "Terrorism: Ancient Warfare for the Future by High-Tech Zealots." With a background as a Green Beret and experience in intelligence, Wilson had special knowledge to convey. A retired lieutenant colonel of the U.S. Army, he teaches at the Governor's School for Global Economics and Technology at Longwood and at Southside Virginia Community Colleges.

• David Dupuy, professor of physics and astronomy at Virginia Military Institute, talked about "CCD Photometry at the VMI Observatory." Dr. Dupuy is coordinated observations.

JANUARY

- Sportswriter Frank Deford, author, commentator, contributing editor to Vanity Fair magazine, and sports columnist for National Public Radio's Morning Edition and ESPN, talked about "Sports Today: The Glory and The Irony." Deford spent a quarter of a century at Sports Illustrated and was the editor-in-chief of The National Sports Daily. He is the author of eleven books; his most recent novel, Love and Infamy, a story that takes place in Japan just before Pearl Harbor, was highly acclaimed as both fiction and history. GQ magazine has called Deford "the world's greatest sportswriter."
- Robert Wimer '65, editorial page editor of The News and Advance in Lynchburg, talked about editorial writing. Wimer has held a number of news positions since joining The Daily Advance as a copy editor in 1972. He became city editor of the afternoon paper in 1976 and later covered politics and the Virginia General Assembly for both The News and The Daily Advance from 1978 to 1980. He was named editor of the editorial pages of The News & Daily Advance in 1983. Wimer, who majored in history and political science, has won a number of Virginia Press Association awards for columns and editorial writing.

Music, music

- In September, Fabio Parrini performed Bach, Chopin, and Ravel. Parrini has been a Fellow of the Young Artist Program of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival, and gave a recital here last season.
- EKKO!, a New York avant-garde musical group, visited in October. Mike Rosensky, who teaches guitar at the University of Virginia and at Hampden-Sydney, is the director.
- Pianists Robert Carrol Smith and James C. Kidd performed works by Mozart, Schubert, Ravel, and Gottschalk in their piano duet concert in Crawley Forum in November. Smith has toured the United States, Canada, and Europe as soloist and accompanist. Kidd, Elliott Professor of Fine Arts at H-SC, has served as executive director and a participating artist of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival since 1982.
- The Hampden-Sydney Glee Club and the Mary Baldwin Choir (with orchestra) presented the Christmas portions of Handel's Messiah, on December 4 in Crawley Forum. The choir's voices, appropriately, filled the hall named for the late T. Edward Crawley '41, professor of English, musician, and longtime director of the Glee Club.
- Pianist Andreas Klein, host of the PBS television program "Intermezzo with Andreas Klein" and frequent guest on NPR's "Performance Today," performed works by Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, Ravel, and others on December 5. A graduate of the Juilliard School and holder of a doctorate in music from Rice University, he has performed in this country, Europe, and Canada.

- In the opening concert of 1997, three alumni of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival—violinist Wyn Hart, violist Seljuk Kardan, and cellist Samuel Swift—were joined by friends and professional colleagues, violinist Michael Roth and pianist Shaun Tirrell, in a concert of chamber music on January 23, in honor of the Brahms Centenary year celebrated throughout 1997.

- To commemorate the bicentennial of Franz Schubert's birth, baritone Bruce Tammen and pianist Kit Bridges presented a concert of songs on January 29. In addition to songs by Schubert, they performed works by other composers who carried Schubert's legacy into the twentieth century.

Students who serve here

AT THE COLLEGE WE OFTEN LIKE to talk about training young men for public service in the world beyond the gates. We sometimes give less attention to their service to peers and community right here at Hampden-Sydney.

The Student Athlete Mentor (SAM) program is an example of initiatives that the College encourages and the students keep going. Developed to reduce the negative consequences of alcohol and other drug abuse, the SAM program helps to contribute to a safer social environment on campus. This fall Cory Williams '97, Tom Squire '97, and Chris Keyser '98 assisted in the training of new recruits. They and other SAMs—Robbie Peay '98 and Jason Keefer '98, baseball; Ryan Sharp '98, basketball; Landon Booth '98, cross country; Jeff Anderson '98, Tim Clary '99, and Chris Bryant '00, football; Jamie Worthen '98, Chamie Burroughs '99, and David Lawrence '98, lacrosse; Joe Holder '97 and Brian Workman '98, soccer; Ryan Gravender '98, tennis—participated in substance abuse prevention training and became resources for their teams. On the day before the Macon game (November 15) the SAMs positioned a wrecked car next to the College's entrance gates, to remind fans of the dangers of drinking and driving. And, accompanied by Director of Counseling Glen Bowman, H-SC's SAMs joined other NCAA schools in a substance abuse prevention conference in Charlottesville in January. Two SAMs, Jason Keefer and Robby Peay, learned "hands on" about the Athletic Prevention, Programming, and Leadership Education model (APPLE).

Much of the assistance that students offer takes place one-on-one. Academic Peer Tutors Jeff Bennett '98, Ben deLee '98, Joseph Fritsch '98, Lem Purcell '97, and Charlie Homiller '97 offer free tutoring sessions in History, Political Science, English, Philosophy—almost Quentin Keynes, a renowned African explorer (CENTER), came to campus this spring to recount the adventure of finding a monogram, carved inside a hollow banyan tree, of Dr. Livingstone, the 19th-century explorer whose path across Africa Keynes had been tracing. His lecture was sponsored by the Union-Philanthropic Society.

every subject that Hampden-Sydney College offers. "The service is all-volunteer and absolutely free," said deLee. "I should think it would be rather difficult to find that kind of service at any other place."

For help with the writing process, students can turn to Joe Holder '97, Ben deLee '98, Matt Garrison '99, Lem Purcell '97, Jon Vordermark '98, Bryant McCulley '98, Todd Goodnight '99, Mike Patrick '97, or Matt Chidley '97, who staff the Writing Center under the guidance of Professors Deis, Frye, and Hingeley.

Other groups, some ad hoc, lend a hand to area residents. Last fall, Resident Advisor Franco Zellner '98 arranged for a group of RAs, faculty members, and students to glean apples left after the commercial harvest at Silver Creek Orchards in Nelson County. The group picked and packaged more than 1250 pounds of apples and gave them to the food bank in Farmville. Athletes in Action, a division of H-SC's Good Men Good Citizens, has started a big-brother program in the physical education classes of Prince Edward County Elementary School. Positive role models Kevin Holt '00, Blair Griffen '00, Joe Beatty '00, and Charles Redding '99 lead exercises, play games, and answer children's questions about creating a healthy and successful life.

And sometimes students' efforts are ad lib. In December, the members of Kappa Alpha social fraternity got together with the Alpha Sigma Alpha sorority at Longwood College and threw a big Christmas Party at the KA house for 23 area children, ages six to nine. Santa Claus (Trip Young '00) handed each of the children two gifts, bought with money collected at the two houses. Mark Finelli '98, one of the party's organizers, believes that he and other students come up with such ways of helping because it feels good, but also because they feel they must. "On a daily basis at H-SC, we're asked to improve ourselves intellectually and socially," he said. "It's only natural that we're driven to do something for others."

U-Phips get busy

ON THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY of the Union Philanthropic Society, Blair Professor of Latin Emeritus Graves H. Thompson '27 addressed a convocation at the Society Oak next to the Bell Tower on September 17. The convocation led off a semester of activity for the "U-Phips," who sponsored a number of debates and discussions on current issues and invited the whole community.

Some of the topics:

- "Has high culture been overrun by popular culture?"
- "Hampden-Sydney: The Past 20 Years and the 21st Century."
- "Resolved, That contemporary feminism has nothing to offer a modern American woman." (Women from Sweet Briar and Randolph-Macon took part.)

Members of Kappa Alpha social fraternity got together with the Alpha Sigma Alpha sorority at Longwood College and threw a big Christmas Party at the KA house for 23 area children.

- "Is China the Greatest Threat to United States Security Today?"
- "Is there Absolute Truth? If so, how is it known?" (Dr. James A. Arieti, Professor of Classics, participated.)
- "A Legal and Constitutional Discussion of Capital Punishment," with J. Richard Broughton '95 as guest.
- "Homosexuality: Morality, the Constitution, and Gay Marriage."

Students to ethics conference

SENIORS Brant McDuffie, R.J. Mapes, David Egerton, and Professor Ken Townsend of the Economics Department participated in the 19th annual conference on "Christian Ethics in Business," November 7-9, at Hilton Head, South Carolina, sponsored by the Men of the Church of the three Presbyterian Churches on the island. The conference draws approximately 100 students and 50 faculty members from colleges and universities on the eastern seaboard. Students analyzed business ethics case studies, many written by Norman Racusin, past-president of RCA Records and executive vice-president of NBC. Faculty sessions focused on ecological ethics, applied to development issues at Hilton Head, as well as on the ethics of grading.

STAFF NOTES

• DIRECTOR OF CAPITAL PROGRAMS George M. Peters has been named the 1997 winner of the Nina F. Abady Development Recognition Award, presented annually by the Virginia Association of Fundraising Executives (VAFRE); it is the Association's highest award for professional and ethical service. Peters was recognized for his "long-standing commitment to Hampden-Sydney and for his remarkable success in cultivating major and capital gifts and in fostering planned giving. C. Beeler Brush, vice president for development at the College, said, "George has been so successful because he combines his technical expertise and knowledge of the College, its programs, and its people, with his engaging personality. He has undoubtedly been the number-one fundraiser in Hampden-Sydney's history." He has raised over $8 million during his career here. Peters is a graduate of Carnegie Mellon University; he came to the College after a career in executive management, most recently as president of American Standard, Inc., a multinational manufacturing firm.

- Following his mentor's departure to Rollins College in Florida, Trip Tepper '94 was appointed Sports Information Director in August 1996. While a student at H-SC, Trip played basketball and worked as an assistant to former SID Dean Hybl. For a year, he was Assistant SID at Winthrop University in Rock Hill, South Carolina.

- Sally Waters, Director of Financial Resource Counseling, was elected in late spring to a three-year term as Financial Aid Division chair for the Southern Region of the College Board. She was one of a group of about ten financial aid administrators and technical staff attending (at the College Board's expense) a three-day PowerFairs—financial aid software—users' conference in Aspen, Colorado, September 15-19. There, Waters and representatives from Colorado College, Harvard-Radcliffe, Occidental, Wake Forest, and Wofford attempted to rid the recently developed software of some existing bugs and to work out improvements.

- In September, Mary Herdegen, Director-Curator of the Atkinson Museum, was again one of sixteen selected to participate in a week-long workshop on "Caring for Museum Collections" at the Smithsonian Institution's Center for Museum Studies. Aimed at aiding staff to establish and maintain physical and intellectual control of their collections, the workshop focused on the practical aspects of establishing policies and procedures, developing record-keeping forms, and inventorying, documenting, and locating objects held by the museum. The participants came from every region of the United States, including Puerto Rico, and represented diverse collections: The Peabody Museum of Natural History at Yale University; Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, Inc. in Arlington; Indian Arts Research Center in Santa Fe; the Museo Pablo Casals in San Juan; Sloss Furnaces National Historic Landmark in Birmingham; and the DuSable Museum of African-American History in Chicago. Herdegen was awarded the Red Baseball Bat, given at the end of the course to the participant whose collection management faced the largest challenges.

Herdegen also attended a workshop and conference sponsored by the Southeastern Museum Conference (SEMC) at Jekyll Island, GA in October. "Disaster Preparedness and Recovery" was a full-day workshop presented by Preservation Field Service Officers from Southeastern Library Network (SOLINET).

and cleaned, but otherwise unused; athletic fields lay fallow. That is no longer the case: the May Term ("Short Term" or "Mini-mester," as it used to be called), the Music Festival, Summer College, and athletic camps have kept up a busy hum as a full summer schedule has evolved.

The May Term

Hampden-Sydney College's May Term (which ran this year from May 21 to June 21) gives students from Hampden-Sydney and surrounding colleges a chance not only to immerse themselves in Spanish in Mérida or study international relations in Europe, but to stay on campus and take inter-disciplinary courses like "Paris in the Twenties" or the physics of modern weaponry. In all, the May Term offers more than 30 courses.

Summer College

Each summer, The College's Alumni Office sponsors Summer College, offering guests a long weekend to relax while learning something about history, politics, or current events. "Many people come to the Summer College because they want to learn more about a subject," says Alumni Director John Waters, "and many of them just want to come back to Hampden-Sydney." Last year, Dr. Emory Thomas, Regents Professor of History at the University of Georgia, H-SC Professor of History Ronald Heinemann, College Chaplain and historian William E. Thompson, Civil War expert Chris Calkins, storyteller William A. Young, Jr., and author-historian Robert Crick presented "The Civil War: A Grand & Terrible Affair," which drew the greatest number of participants to date. Summer College 1997, whose subject was the Revolutionary War, attracted a large crowd in its turn.

The Music Festival

The Hampden-Sydney Music Festival, in its sixteenth season, continues to offer the best in chamber music through artists' concerts, music-lovers' weekends, and a two-week professional training program for young artists. Performances on Friday and Saturday, May 23 and 24, and Friday and Saturday, May 30 and 31, featured works by Brahms in celebration of the centennial of his birth, as well as works by Ravel, Weber, Wolf, and Beethoven.

Student study and research

Throughout the summer, faculty members and students conduct research and further their studies, both here and abroad. Some earn six hours of credit studying Tudor-Stuart History and Literature at St. Anne's College, Oxford. Others enroll in summer programs at other foreign universities.

Last summer, among the students who completed their internships as part of Hampden-Sydney College's Public Service Program were Brad Gillen '97 and Taylor Smack '97. Gillen's assignment was to design a web page, in conjunction with his research, for the Heritage Foundation. Smack, an intern with the City Manager's Office in Charlottesville, became a specialist on reversion (the movement of cities back to town status); by summer's end, the Charlottesville City Manager's Office had asked him to submit a report, as a paid consultant, on his research on the reversion of another Virginia city.

Last summer, too, nine students completed research programs under the direction of faculty advisors and supported by College Honors grants:

- Floyd Canfield '97 (Classics) "Herodotus's Medicine"
- Thad Davis '97 (Psychology) "An Analysis of Personality Variables in School-Aged Children with Learning Disabilities"
- Ben deLee '98 (Fine Arts) "Centrally Planned Vaulted Structures in Rome, Ravenna, and North Africa in the Early Middle Ages"
- Gordon Gifford '97 (Psychology) "Comparison of the Dual Distraction and Redefinition Mechanisms Underlying Audioanalgesia"
- Randy Jones '98 (English-History) "Rocky Road: The Long Journey to Educational Freedom in Prince Edward County"
- Matt Kolbinsky '98 (Physics) "Studies of the Time Variability of Energy"
- John Lansche '98 (Psychology) "Teachers' Perceptions of Students With Learning Disabilities"
- Jim Sparks '98 (Philosophy) "Michael Ruse's Ethical Objectivity Dilemma"
- Cory Williams '97 (Biology) "Are Bottlenose Dolphins Near Beaufort, North Carolina, Resident or Migratory?"

A number of these papers resulting from students' summer research are to be presented at regional or national conferences this spring. The result in part of an archeological dig in Tunis, deLee's work was presented at the National Conference of Undergraduate Research (NCUR) at the University of Texas-Austin in April. Jones's paper, about the events in Prince Edward County that led to the school strike in 1951, was also presented at the NCUR. Davis's paper on learning disabilities was presented at the Virginia Psychological Association (VPA) conference in April. Gifford, with his faculty advisor Daniel Mossler, has submitted his paper on audioanalgesia, and with advisor Robert Herdegen another work on attributional style, to the VPA. Lansche's work on learning disabilities (with Mossler as first author) was presented at the Eastern Psychological Association Conference, the VPA, and the American Psychological Society conferences in the spring.

Bryan addresses Graduates

By C. Cameron Carter '95

SO, DO YOU REMEMBER WHO spoke at your graduation? J. Stewart Bryan III, this year's commencement speaker and Media General's president and CEO, claims that he can't. In fact, he continued, he couldn't remember much of what anyone has ever said at any of the many commencement ceremonies that he has attended. And so, the goal of his lecture was to impress upon just one person some point that will stay with him throughout his life.

And his point, it seems, was that man's ability to reason is what separates him from other animals, and that we should carefully use that ability to obtain our goals. He credits Hampden-Sydney for providing an education to each of the men who have attended its classes—an education that enhances her graduates' intellectual abilities, and one that allows her alumni to make morally sound choices. Choices that, with a bit of imagination, and a lot of dedication, can make the world a better place for them and for everyone else.

He pointed out that humans are the only creatures capable of "thinking about thinking about something," or even "thinking about thinking about thinking about something." But, much past the third order, he claims, it becomes difficult even for us to comprehend.

He encouraged the Class of 1997 to use its ability to forecast an action's consequences as a tool for making intelligent and benevolent decisions. Being able to think about an action, to ponder the results of a given choice, are skills unique to men, and necessary for being a successful man. The knowledge that the graduates have gained from their alma mater has provided them a strong foundation onto which they can build successful and virtuous lives, he claimed.

But, he reminded his audience, making decisions that are virtuous, or fair, or civil, does not mean that a man cannot be wealthy and powerful. He encouraged the men to follow whatever dreams they might have, but to use what they have learned from Hampden-Sydney to make wise choices.

Later in the ceremony, Mr. Bryan and Erich Loest, a renowned German novelist, received honorary doctorates of humane letters. Dr. W. Ivan Hoy '36, a Presbyterian minister, educator, and agent of the World Council of Churches, received an honorary doctorate of divinity. Trustee Robert King, Jr. '52 was given an Algernon Sydney Sullivan medallion.

NINE FACULTY MEMBERS BEGAN the 1996-97 academic year with a new rank. John L. Brinkley (Classics), Robert T. Herdegen III (Psychology), and James M. Schiffer (English) were promoted to full professor. Stanley A. Cheyne (Physics), Mark A. Prell (Economics), and Patrick A. Wilson (Philosophy) were promoted to associate professor with tenure. And Tom O'Grady (English, Poet-in-Residence), Susan P. Robbins (English), and Pamela S. Langlois (History) were promoted to adjunct associate professor.

Other Faculty News

- Mike Berman offered slides, reminiscences, regrets, anecdotes, and observations about his experiences as a Fulbright Scholar and mathematics professor in Africa (1994-95), in his faculty work-in-progress in October.
- Elizabeth Deis (Rhetoric and Humanities) is the editor of George Meredith's 1895 Collection of Three Stories, a new edition of a collection of three stories by the British Victorian author. In the volume's introductory essay, "Explorations of Gender and Power," Deis discusses the stories in their literary and historical context. She also includes with the stories the full text of several 1895 reviews that reflect the range of social and literary perspectives on gender typical of the Victorian age.

- Lowell Frye (Rhetoric and Humanities) and Alex Werth (Biology) presented a joint lecture, "Are We Not Men?: Morality and Human Nature" as part of the Faculty Honors lecture series in November. Drawing on topics they were discussing in their freshman honors seminar, they investigated the nature of altruistic behavior by considering topics as seemingly diverse as Aristotle's Ethics and current trends in sociobiology.

- Jim Kidd (Music) and pianist Robert Smith, professor emeritus of piano at Indiana State University, gave a piano duet concert at Christopher Newport University in September, as a benefit concert for the Friends of Music, which provides scholarship help for music students. They repeated the concert here at H-SC in November.

- In November, Robb Koether, Andrzej Rusewicz, and Tom Valente (Mathematics) attended the fall meeting of the Maryland-District of Columbia-Virginia section of the Mathematical Association of America at Hood College in Frederick, Maryland. Koether presented a talk, "When Is Merlin's Magic Square Solvable?" and Valente presented "Using Mathematica

- Last fall, David Lewis won the Howard and Marjorie Lovestead Award in the Ninth Annual Northern National Art Show at Nicolet College in Rhinelander, Wisconsin. More than 400 artists from throughout the United States entered the two-dimensional mixed-media competition; ninety won a spot in the show.
- In November Tom O'Grady (English) attended the National Poetry Showcase, a display of every book of poetry published in this country this year (including his collection, Sun, Moon & Stars). Held in New York City, the Showcase is sponsored by Poets House, a national archive of contemporary poetry. While in the city, Tom and his family had lunch with New Yorker Assistant Fiction Editor Jay Fielden '92, Curtis Brown literary agency reader Jack Mayfield '95, poet David Ignatow, playwright Joe Robinette, and actor Peter Goetz, and saw the play Sex and Longing, a Lincoln Center preview production starring Goetz and actress Sigourney Weaver.
- In November, Roxann Prazniak (History) gave the first talk in "Teachers Talking About Writing," a lecture series in which teachers outside the Humanities Division discuss their struggles and successes as authors.
- Susan Robbins (English) won first place in the Deep South Writers Conference short-story competition, sponsored by the University of Southwestern Louisiana, for her short story, "Best Man."
- Mary Saunders (English), named in October to a two-year term as President of the Victorians Institute, delivered a paper, "Entertaining Characters: Spectacles of the Self in Barchester Towers and Little Dorrit," at the SUNY Conference on Language and Literature.
- Bill Shear (Biology) and his co-researchers, Patricia Gensel of the University of North Carolina and Andrew Jeram of the Belfast Museum in Northern Ireland, announced in the December 11, 1996, issue of Nature magazine the finding of the oldest fossils of land animals in the world. The fossils uncovered in New Brunswick and Quebec, Canada, by Gensel in 1980 and 1992 and identified by Shear in 1994 are about 390 million years old, the oldest yet discovered in North America. The world's oldest animal fossils were discovered by Jeram in Shropshire, England. Shear has studied the evolution of spiders, millipedes, and centipedes; his work in paleontology has helped to affirm that certain creatures arrived on land about 415 million years ago—15 million years earlier than once thought.

- James Schiffer (English) and Amos Lee Laine (History) participated in the Twenty-first International Conference on Patristic, Mediaeval, and Renaissance Studies at Villanova University in October. Schiffer chaired a session on Renaissance Poetry, and Laine read a paper in a session on politics and culture in the reign of Henry VIII.
- Herb Sipe (Chemistry) and Ken Townsend (Economics) presented the first in the year's Honors Lectures Series, in October. "Order and Chaos: Exploration of the Influence of Physical Science on Social Science" drew upon ideas generated by the freshman honors seminar they were teaching.
- Wayne Tucker (Classics) attended the biennial meeting of the Southern Section of the Classical Association of the Middle West and South, held in Savannah, Georgia, in October. As immediate past president of the group, he served as chair of the Nominating Committee, and he also presided at a session of papers. Following the meeting, he drove to St. Simons Island for the wedding of long-time Museum Board member Elizabeth LeSueur and Theodore (Jerry) Aldhizer, M.D. At the reception following the ceremony Tucker had a chance to talk to former Trustee T. Kyle Baldwin '39 and his wife Mary, who have made their home on St. Simons Island for the past sixteen years.
- Katherine Weese (English) talked about "Monsters, Ghosts, Geeks and Freaks: Fantastic Devices in Contemporary Women's Fiction," in September as part of the faculty work-in-progress series. Weese's research is a study of ways contemporary women novelists use fantastic devices to challenge patriarchal conventions and to explore the social realities of women's lives in the twentieth century.
- Patrick Wilson (Philosophy) spent most of summer 1996 in Tucson, participating in an NEH Institute, "New Perspectives on Classical Antiquity." He also participated in the Templeton Foundation summer workshop at Oxford University.

Sports Roundup

By Trip Tepper '94

THE 1996 SOCCER SEASON continued a string of excellence: at 10-8-1, this was the team's fifth consecutive season with at least ten wins. The Tigers survived a mix of big wins over bitter rivals, close losses to nationally-ranked teams, and devastating injuries to key players.

For the third straight year, the Tigers won an ODAC tournament game and advanced to the semi-final round. Five players on the 1996 squad made the All-ODAC squad. Junior midfielder Jason Van Sice and junior defender McKittrick Simmons were first-team selections while senior forward Joe Holder, the leading goal scorer for H-SC with nine, senior defender Charlie Fonville, and freshman midfielder J.R. Hughes, who led the Tigers with 24 points, were second-team selections. In addition to the five all-conference standouts, freshman defender Scott Witte, sophomore forward Justin Holofchak, junior midfielder Brian Workman, and junior Kris Douglas were major contributors. The senior class, highlighted by Fonville, Holder, and senior defender Thomas Squire, finished their four years with 46 wins, the most of any class in the history of H-SC Soccer.

The 1996 season began with the annual match-up with local rival Longwood College. In sweltering heat, the Tigers played the Lancers to a 2-2 tie; senior Joe Holder scored the game-tying goal late in the second half. After two solid wins over Marymount University BELOW CENTER: Junior midfielder Jason Van Sice (#20) was a first team All-ODAC and second team All-South Atlantic selection after scoring seven goals and seven assists for the Tigers this season. Freshman midfielder J.R. Hughes (#24) led the Tigers in scoring this season with seven goals and ten assists. Hughes was named second team All-ODAC.

FAR LEFT: Senior forward Joe Holder finished out his brilliant career with nine goals and four assists, earning second-team All-ODAC honors.

BELOW: Sophomore running back Dorion Baker, who earned second team All-ODAC honors, led the Tigers in rushing and scoring with 637 yards and six touchdowns.

Phil Culicerno, the new Head Football Coach.

A 1986 graduate of Virginia Tech, Phil came to Hampden-Sydney that year as assistant football coach; once here, he and his wife Carolyn fell under the spell of this place and decided they wanted to stay. Phil has since served Hampden-Sydney as head baseball coach, director of intramurals, and head tennis coach in addition to his duties in football. He is an usher, lector, and teacher at St. Theresa Catholic Church, a member of the American Football Coaches Association and the National Strength and Conditioning Association, and a former member of the Farmville Jaycees. In 1994, he was a member of the Hampden-Sydney College Self-Study Committee on Community Involvement. and N.C. Wesleyan, H-SC traveled to the most competitive tournament in the history of the H-SC program, the Elizabethtown Blue Jay Classic, on September 13 and 14. The Tigers matched the host team, who had qualified for the 1996 NCAA Division III tournament, but fell one goal short in a tough 2-1 loss.

After such a brutal early-season schedule, the Tigers were well prepared for the bulk of the ODAC conference slate. H-SC opened the ODAC season with a 5-1 thrashing of Bridgewater College; talented freshman J.R. Hughes notched two goals and one assist in his first college start.

With inspired play by Hughes and Fonville, the Tigers won three of their next four games, all crucial conference wins; a convincing 4-1 trouncing of Emory & Henry sent the Tigers to semifinals of the ODAC tournament for the third consecutive season.

Looking ahead to 1997, head coach Bert Molinary returns seven of the top ten scorers (including last season's leading scorer Mike Melvin, who broke his leg in the second week of the year, and injured junior midfielder Greg Chittum) and expects to remain competitive in the Old Dominion Athletic Conference.

Cross Country

With a group of mostly first-year runners, head coach Dee Vick guided his team to a sixth-place finish in the ODAC Championship meet. After finishing the last two seasons in fourth place (the best ODAC tournament finish in school history), this year's squad fell just short of past performances, but remains hopeful for a solid showing in years to come.

A trio of freshmen led the Tigers this season. Buddy Christner from Midlothian was the top runner for H-SC, nailing a top-25 finish in the Virginia State Meet for Division II and Division III schools. Richmond's Stafford Via, a pleasant surprise for coach Vick, showed his talents early in the season with a solid finish at the University of Virginia Invitational, a meet in which 11 of the 13 teams were NCAA Division I. Against a deep and talented field, Via managed to run a very respectable 31:26.96, the top time for H-SC. Mike Cahak, from Handley High in Winchester, finished in 31st place in the ODAC meet and was one of the top three runners for H-SC in the Virginia State Meet on October 12 at Christopher Newport University.

Football (3-7, 1-4 ODAC)

Throughout a season of close losses, the Tigers seemed to be just one play, one block, one break away from winning—yet also provided dramatic wins of historic proportions.

Most notable was their victory in the opening week of the season in front of a hostile Gettysburg crowd. The Tigers battled valiantly for four quarters only to end the game tied at 10-10—bringing into play a new NCAA rule, which mandates overtime to decide games, and entering the record books as the first regular-season overtime game in the history of Division III football.

One of the top individual performances in the Gettysburg game was turned in by senior linebacker Jeff Anderson, whose 23 tackles earned him both National Defensive Player of the Week honors for Division III and ODAC Defensive Player of the Week honors.

After a tough 35-3 loss at Wesley in week two, H-SC rebounded with another dramatic win over ODAC foe Guilford College during Parents Weekend. Once again Jeff Anderson was honored as ODAC Defensive Player of the Week, after recording 12 tackles. Sophomore wide receiver Aaron Settles snatched nine passes for 158 yards and one touchdown.

With their record at 2-4 overall, the Tigers hosted South Region power Catholic University. Despite valiant efforts by sophomore running back Dorion Baker, who scored on a 65-yard scamper to tie the game at 7-7 just four minutes into the first quarter, and by Jeff Anderson, whose 58-yard interception return cut the deficit to 24-14, Catholic would end up the winner at 45-14. Adding injury to insult, leading receiver Aaron Settles was lost for the season; the Hampton native had registered 40 catches for 517 yards in just seven games.

Coming off a loss to Davidson and a solid effort versus Methodist, the Tigers hosted the 102nd meeting in the Oldest Small College Rivalry in the South. In a hard-fought defensive battle, the R-MC special teams made the difference in the 20-10 win for the Jackets, despite the efforts of Todd Rudzinski, who kicked a third-quarter 30-yard field goal, and Walt Bondurant, who passed for 237 yards and a school-record-tying 23 completions; his two main targets, senior Jason Raper and sophomore Blake Carleton, caught nine and eight passes respectively.

With 1,506 yards passing and 150 completions, Bondurant turned in one of the best individual passing performances in school history. The Smithfield native smashed the former record of completions in a season of 132 by Bill Newell in 1978; the 1,506 yards passing ranks fourth on the all-time single season list. Dorion Baker finished the year with 637 yards rushing, which ranked second in the ODAC statistics. The two defensive standouts Jeff Anderson and Nathan Lukeson closed their careers with great performances: Anderson finished the day with 16 tackles and 131 total tackles for the season, while Lukeson had 11 tackles and two sacks to finish with a season-high eight sacks for the year.

Basketball

For the third time in the last four years and for the fourth time in the nineties, Hampden-Sydney earned a bid to the NCAA Division III National Championship Tournament. Even though the Tigers came up on the short end of the 79-74 loss to Christopher Newport in the first-round game, the season was a reflection of a team which, although it had only one senior to lead ten freshmen and sophomores, matured over the season to complete the year with a 21-7 record and the number-one ranking in the South Region.

The Tigers started on a roll, sweeping the Wal-Mart Tipoff Classic with a dramatic 78-76 win over Marietta College and a championship game victory over NCAA Tournament participant Goucher College.

Senior Bryan Sheridan was named tournament MVP and was joined on the All-Tournament team by senior Elson DeVan and freshman Chris Fox. After a loss to Bridgewater before Christmas, the Tigers won the Oglethorpe Stormy Petrel Classic in Atlanta with a double overtime win over the host school, Oglethorpe University and a win over Hanover College in the championship game. Fox took MVP honors for the tournament; freshman Jeremy Harris also made the All-Tournament squad.

The Tigers entered the new year with a 8-1 record, only to slide to an 11-5 mark. After falling completely out of the South Region rankings, H-SC began to gel and ran off victories in 10 of its next 11 games, including two wins over Roanoke College, climbing to the top of the South Region poll.

The second victory over the Maroons marked the 200th win in the career of Hampden-Sydney head coach Tony Shaver.

With wins over Randolph-Macon, Roanoke, and Lynchburg, the Tigers captured not only the ODAC Tournament title but also an NCAA berth and the number one seed in the region. The win over Macon was a defensive clinic run by the Tigers as they held R-MC guard Joe Goldin, who four days earlier had torched Emory & Henry for 43 points, to just two points and three field goal attempts in the 85-66 win. In their semifinal versus Roanoke, the Tigers rallied from a late six-point deficit to capture an emotional 63-62 win over the Maroons, completing the three-game season sweep. The finale was truly anti-climactic: H-SC dismantled Lynchburg College 102-70 with hot shooting and a suffocating defense. Sheridan collected more hardware, with an All-Tournament trophy, along with freshman T.J. Grimes.

All-ODAC performer Bryan Sheridan led the Tigers in scoring (11.9 ppg) and rebounding (7.3 rpg); senior point guard Elson DeVan led H-SC with 4.8 assists per game. A trio of first-year players quickly cracked the starting lineup and were double-figure scorers for the entire season. Chris Fox was an outstanding perimeter player who knocked down some crucial three-point shots and finished with a scoring average of 11.9 while making a team-high 54 three-pointers. T.J. Grimes, voted the South Region "Freshman of the Year" by Columbus Multimedia, emerged towards the end of the season as the Tigers' most explosive scorer; he finished with 11.6 points per game and a team-high 49.0 field goal percentage. Jeremy Harris, the Tigers' man in the middle, was a physical presence who complemented Sheridan in the post and was fourth in scoring (10.1 ppg) and second in rebounding (5.3 rpg).

Baseball (5-22, 3-13 ODAC)

One of the highlights of the season was the 19-13 win over the Bridgewater Eagles, the three-time defending conference champions. Junior catcher Russ Bradshaw belted a three-run homer and drove in five runs to lead the Tigers' 19-run, 19-hit attack.

Overall, sophomore hurler Walt Bondurant led the Tigers in victories with a 3-5 record while freshman Andy Daniel, who served as H-SC's closer out of the bullpen, led the Tigers with 34 strikeouts in just 20.7 innings. Junior second baseman Jason Keefer, who captured All-ODAC honors for the second consecutive year, led the Tigers in batting with a .356 average; Russ Bradshaw was the power source with a team-high seven home runs and 23 RBI.

With coach Phil Culicerto taking over head football coaching duties, Hampden-Sydney baseball will have a familiar face in the dugout in 1998: former Tiger baseball legend Bobby Humphreys will lead the Tigers next season. Humphreys, a charter member of the H-SC Athletic Hall of Fame, was a standout for the Garnet and Grey from 1954 to 1958 and played in the major leagues for five teams from 1962 to 1970. He brings a wealth of major-league experience and knowledge, which will give our baseball program instant prestige in Division III ranks.

Lacrosse (8-7, 4-2 ODAC)

All-American and All-ODAC sophomore attackman Chamie Burroughs was sensational all season: he led the Tigers in scoring in 10 of their 15 games and finished the year with a team-high 39 goals. Defensively, All-American and All-ODAC junior Jamie Worthen had another outstanding year as he led H-SC with 135 ground balls and was part of a solid defensive unit which included sophomore Ward Smith and junior Brooks DuBose; keeper Scott Ketcham was solid between the pipes all season.

Head coach Ray Rostan has to be pleased that all H-SC's starters at every position return for what looks to be potentially one of the finest seasons in school history. Sophomore attackman Matt Yancey, who notched 21 goals this season, junior middle Doug Palmer (second-team All-ODAC), who tallied 17 goals and 10 assists, and talented freshmen Ross Turco and Russell Carter, who combined for 24 goals and 18 assists, give H-SC plenty of offensive fire power in '98.

Tennis (10-6, 6-1 ODAC)

Senior Brett Eckley made history at the ODAC Tennis Championships at Washington & Lee as he became the first player in school history to win three consecutive ODAC singles championships. Eckley captured the No. 2 singles title after being seeded 10th following a season hampered by injury. As a sophomore and a junior, Eckley won the No. 4 singles titles; he overcame long odds this year for the "three-peat" at No. 2. The Tigers placed all six singles players in the finals versus W&L.

The Tigers finished the season 10-6, for a second-place finish in the ODAC. Seniors Eckley, Jim Harrell, and Jeremy Graybill, along with juniors Campbell Palmer and Ryan Gravender and freshman Bryan Duquette, finished the season with All-ODAC honors. The future certainly looks bright for H-SC tennis as the No.1 singles player Duquette returns along with No. 3 singles player Palmer and No. 4 singles player Gravender.

Golf

The Tigers finished off the 1997 season with a third-place finish at the ODAC Golf Championships in Ashland. Freshman John Mears, who had been the top player for H-SC throughout the year, capped off a sensational rookie campaign with a fourth-place finish in the individual standings, with a two-day total of 154. Mears was named to the All-Tournament team and also received All-ODAC honors for the 1997 season, as did senior co-captain David Egerton, who scored a two-day total of 164 for the Tigers.

Overall, this was a fine season for H-SC Golf as two players, Mears and Egerton, each captured tournament titles. Led by co-captains Philip Cook and Egerton, the team defeated ODAC Champion Washington & Lee in a head-to-head match earlier in the season and also won the Emory & Henry Invitational.

The Hampden-Sydney community was hit hard between Thanksgiving and Easter: three well-known personalities died unexpectedly during those five months.

Change in Constancy

By Eunice Carwile & Richard McClintock

WILLIAM TILLMAN "Tim" BUTLER '62 died of a heart attack on April 16, 1997, in his home on Wilson Circle in Hampden-Sydney; he had been director of the College's Annual Fund since November 1995.

He was in many ways exemplary of the life of public service to which all Hampden-Sydney men are supposed to aspire. Born in Richmond in 1939, Tim Butler was active in the banking business there for a number of years; yet he found time to serve as president of Big Brothers, Big Sisters and to take a leadership role in the life of Welbourne United Methodist Church, among other community organizations.

He continued his banking career in Gloucester, where he served as president of the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce, and as a member of the Gloucester School Board; he was active with the Singleton Methodist Church there. Before moving to Hampden-Sydney, he had been with New York Life Insurance for several years.

Officially, Tim Butler had worked for the College for less than two years. Unofficially he had in fact been working for it ever since his graduation: few volunteers were more eager, or more dependable, than Tim Butler. His long record of service to the College earned him the coveted James J. Keating Founders Medallion, which recognizes exceptional dedication to the welfare of Hampden-Sydney. He and his wife Susan made superb ambassadors for the College, dispensing a constant stream of good humor and hospitality.

As College Chaplain William E. Thompson recalled at the funeral, Tim Butler said, when he came to work at Hampden-Sydney, that "he thought he'd died and gone to heaven." He and his family had joined College Church, and now he is buried there.

A devoted woodworker, Tim Butler made superb reproduction Colonial furniture, as well as dollhouses and Chinese railings for his home.

He is survived by his wife Susan Carter Butler, a son, William Tillman "Tripp" Butler III '93, and a daughter, Mary Elizabeth Butler.

"Tim's death was a lightning bolt from a blue sky, catching us all by surprise," President Samuel V. Wilson told the Parents Council, at an April meeting Tim Butler was to have led. "He dropped while in full stride, happy in his work at his beloved College, brimming with optimism and hope, enjoying success beyond his or our expectations.

"Tim poses us a paradox," President Wilson continued; "on the one hand, he epitomized the ideal of the 'Hampden-Sydney Man'—the prototypical student-athlete, a team player, good-humored and carefree, yet totally dedicated to his family and to Alma Mater, highly moral, living by principle, hard-working, always concerned about others. But Tim was more, much more than all that. He was, I am convinced, just about the kindest, gentlest, most caring human being I ever met. And while he may have, must have, carried some sorrow inside, on the outside he was Mr. Sunshine—and his sunshine was contagious. No one loved Hampden-Sydney College more than Tim Butler. We shall carry on, of course, but we shall miss him greatly every day, and we shall try mightily to live up to his example."

STEVE HARRISON DAVIS, director of the John Brooks Fuqua Computing Center, died on December 6, 1996, at his home on Ropp Lane in Hampden-Sydney; he was 47. While he had been battling cancer, he died from a heart attack.

Steve Davis had been instrumental in bringing the campus's computing systems into the second generation of technology and had almost completed the massive task of connecting every professor, staff member, and student to the campus network, and thus to the world.

Born in 1949 in Opelika, Kansas, Davis entered the Air Force in 1968; he served in Vietnam, Spain, and several domestic bases as a materiel officer, a communications and computer systems analyst, and a logistics chief. For his service he received numerous combat and management awards, including the Meritorious Service Award with three oak leaf clusters, the Republic of Vietnam Gallantry Cross, and the 1980 Outstanding Junior Manager of the Year Award.

He retired as a Major from the Air Force in 1990 and became the director of computing at Hampden-Sydney. He was active in the community, serving as a Little League soccer coach and a volunteer with FACES, the local food bank.

He held a B.S. in psychology from the University of Maryland, a B.S. in computer science from Roosevelt University, a Master's in consulting from Ball State University, and Master's in information systems management from the University of Southern California.

At his memorial service in College Church, he was praised as a fast friend and good neighbor, a patient teacher, and a quiet but efficient manager who had a firm grasp on large goals and on the means to achieve them. President Wilson recalled that "the quiet, reserved exterior of Steve Davis belied a burning fire and a passion and a vision for H-SC at the leading edge of computer technology in the twenty-first century. This was a goal he never lost sight of—on this subject he never rested, always pushing the Internet and World-Wide Web and other revolutionary aspects of burgeoning cyberspace technology. Indeed, his beliefs were so strong that he would become impatient with those of us who were slow to grasp what he was about.

"In truth, Steve Davis was a visionary, who fired his people up with his own vision of the future. H-SC owes much to the farsighted concepts and passion of this 'quiet professional.'

"In future years we will become increasingly aware of our indebtedness to him."

FRANCIS RANDOLPH died on Friday, January 17, 1997. He suffered from no acute illness at the time; he was 83 years old. All his life, he had lived in a house in the woods halfway down Black Bottom (the region south of Via Sacra noted in the old days for having no street lights); since December 1996, he had been living in an area group home.

As a young man, Randolph went from house to house offering to chop firewood for area residents, with an axe resting on his shoulder, and so acquired the name "Francis the Axeman." This tool (in recent years replaced by a walking stick) was off-putting to the uninitiated: new students or strangers to Hampden-Sydney often recalled their being startled by their first look at him—especially when encountered in the dark—yet no one who had been long at Hampden-Sydney feared him.

Despite students' running gags to test Randolph's mental acuity, says Joe Trotter '35, Hampden-Sydney's permanent resident usually got the better of them, whether they knew it or not. "There was this tradition," Trotter recalls, "for the upperclassmen to tell the freshmen to offer Francis a nickel and a dime, and to see which he picked. He always chose the nickel, and the students would laugh uproariously about Francis's not knowing the value of the coins, just selecting the bigger one. Well, I asked Francis about that one time, and he said, 'I pick the nickel, Mr. Trotter, because if I picked the dime, they'd quit.'"

By the 1960s, most of the homes in the former servants' settlement where Randolph lived had been abandoned. The College took over the land, but gave him an income and a lifetime right to his house. Trotter, then the Director of Alumni Affairs, became Randolph's guardian, repairing the house and helping him to obtain supplemental security income. "I was his committee, or he was mine. I never did figure out which of us was in charge," says Trotter of their relationship.

Over the years, Randolph was given aid and care by the community, especially by the members of Mercy Seat Baptist Church just south of the campus, who made sure that he never wanted for clothes or food or a ride to town.

In turn, Randolph remembered students, residents, and professor's children. He would greet them by name when they returned to campus after holidays, summers, or years abroad, and welcome them back home.

He was such a fixture that he seemed almost eternal; not so long ago, an alumnus came to visit his son, now a student at the College. Looking out the window, the father said, "That man looks just like someone who used to walk around here when I was a student; Francis the Axeman we called him." With a smile the son replied, "Dad, that is Francis the Axeman."

And so it was.

ALUMNI PROFILE

Kenneth A. Parker '94, teacher

In early February, Kenneth Parker and his wife Kimberly talked once again about the hazards of his job as a teacher at an inner-city school. Their conversation this time was prompted by the news from a neighboring elementary school: just days before, a 12-year-old had been abducted while on his way home and had later been found dead. Talking about the boy's murder and the effect it had on their lives, Kimberly startled them both by admitting to Kenneth, "Every day, I take it for granted that you're going to work and coming back."

"I do the same," says Kenneth, a fourth-grade teacher at Adelaide Davis Elementary School in Washington, D.C. "But I think I have to deal more with the effects of violence than with violence itself." When news of the child's death—thought to be a gang-related murder—was made public, Parker was more concerned only with how such an event would affect his students. "A lot of my students took it really hard," he recalls. "But we talked about it, and we're working on it."

The District's schools have created a program called "The Responsive Classroom." Before the start of each academic day, the students and their teachers engage in a morning meeting, in which they review the previous day's lesson, play a game, and talk about their experiences.

"Most days, it's very frustrating," Parker says of trying to teach the Three Rs in what seems at times a war zone. "The children come in with a lot of social needs aside from academics. It's sad that some of God's creatures have to go through so much. And they're just children."

Parker cites as an example the case of one of his students—let's call him Philip—who was notorious for refusing to read, or even learning the alphabet. "By the time he got to me," Parker says, "he was so closed up, shut tight." Parker checked the child's history: when he was in the second grade, Philip had been taken away from his mother, a drug abuser, and placed in a foster home, where he was physically abused. "There was so much going on inside him," Parker recalls. "And everybody had been looking at his performance, not at him, the performer. No one seemed to be able to separate the child from his behavior."

Although he feels he has "established a unique relationship" with Philip, Parker's work so far with him and the other students proceeds slowly. Parker is able to celebrate only subtle victories, once in a while. When he was working on his Master's thesis (on the importance of teaching children their families' history) through Cambridge College in Boston, he interviewed a number of the students at Davis about their lives outside of the classroom, and then interviewed the same children two years or so later. He found in the second round of interviews that some of them "had come to terms with their family problems—not solved them, but come to terms with them."

So, why does Parker keep doing it? Not independently wealthy and still paying for his education, he makes a financial sacrifice every time he signs a new teaching contract. And then, there are the violent, dangerous streets.

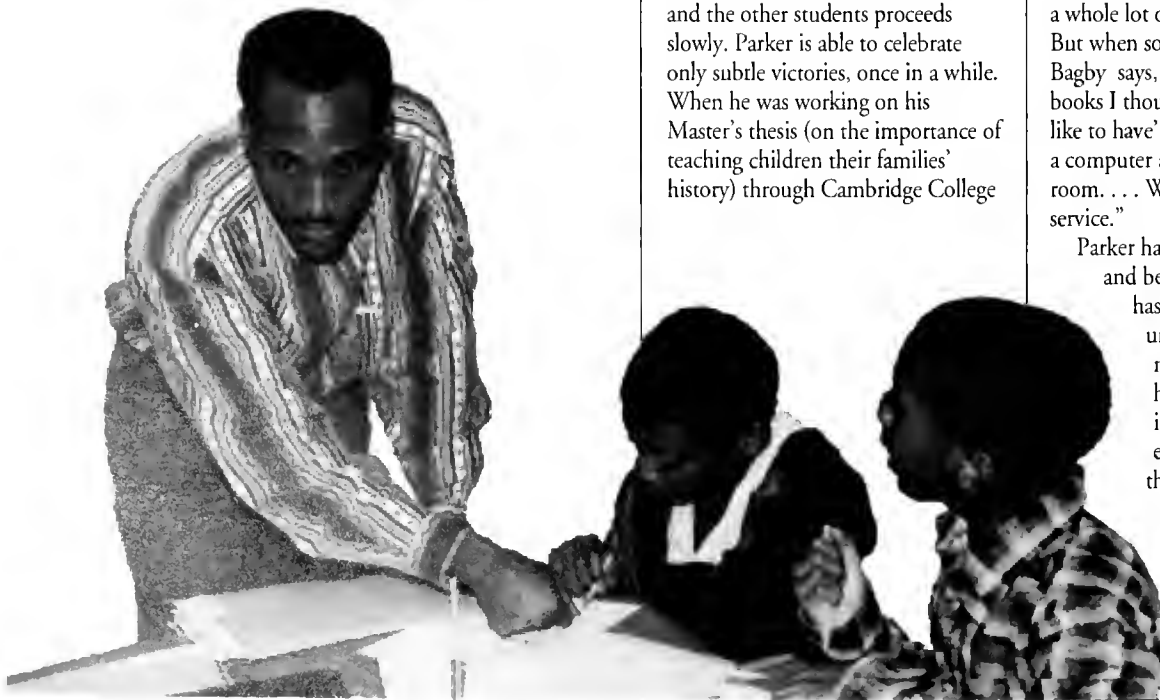

He sticks with it, for now at any rate, because he sees his work as a calling. The students are comfortable with him, he says, and he can identify with them, not simply because of his color but because he was raised in a single-parent household, too. "I want them to see that if I could do it, so could they," he confesses. "I want to show them that there's a different world; that the things they see every day are not normal; that things have order and meaning."

He feels, too, that he has some tall examples to live up to: professors George Bagby and William Shear, among others, who not only gave him encouragement while he was at Hampden-Sydney but have continued to support Parker's classroom efforts. "Everybody gives lip service to a whole lot of things," Parker says. But when somebody like George Bagby says, "Kenneth, here is a set of books I thought your students might like to have" or Bill Shear hands over a computer and printer for my classroom. . . . Well, that's more than lip service."

Parker has gone a step further and begun passing on what he has learned. The first to undertake training in a new education program, he is now going to teach it to other teachers. And every day, he overcomes the doubt, practices an act of faith, and goes back into battle.

"I want them to see that if I could do it, so could they. I want to show them that there's a different world; that the things they see every day are not normal; that things have order and meaning."

ALUMNI PROFILE

Robert Beverly '91, Musician

Robert Beverly opens the backpack. "I feel better if I have a legal pad in my bag," he says, pulling out a microphone cord, a mousepad, and a Buzz Lightyear Spin Pop ("The little Martian from the Bugs Bunny cartoons is a better one," he jokes). He carries the bag, with its toys ("tools for leisure"), wherever he goes.

And he travels a lot, mostly east and west on Route 460.

In 1991—along with classmates Mark Gammon, Tripp Reynolds, Rick Koehler, and Paul Scanniello—he went west to write and publish the Mojo Sloth, an arts and entertainment news magazine. In 1992, he came back east to be the Assistant Dean of Students at Hampden-Sydney. In 1994, he moved back to Roanoke to "do music." In 1995, he came back to Farmville to play music in local nightspots with a band called Live Bait. Then, on New Year's Eve 1995, he packed all his possessions into his car and drove to the real east end of 460, to Dave Matthews's concert in Hampton. After the concert, he got into the car and drove "straight back to Roanoke" to live.

Finally, when the magazine he was editing there folded, Beverly made up his mind, not about where he wanted to be (he still had this Route 460 thing in his head) but about what he wanted to do: music. He started making a CD, Letterbox, at Flat Five Studios in Salem, where Matthews made part of his first record. In Letterbox, Beverly offers melodies and music on keyboards and acoustic guitar, backed up by members of his old band. But the art of his work is in the lyrics of the songs that range from humorous to regretful to painfully cynical. There is Randy Newman-like, self-deprecating wry humor in "No Reason to Shave": "Rain is leakin' through the roof, / water drippin' on my toes / I got a cockroach, skis my feet / giant slalom when it snows." Or "Mean Time": "The mean time, the mean time, / it all but stands still / In the shadows of what I have done." At the other side of despair, he is contemptuous, as in "Occasional Collision": "A casual engagement, with / only bodies involved. / There was no imminent danger / 'Cause they both had / tunnel vision, except for an / occasional collision."

He feels he is better at "structure," at song-writing, than he is at performing. As with other musicians and writers, creation is an uneven process for him. He gets ideas and "snatches of melody" in his head and lives with that for a while, looking for "flashes, little events that might be something I can work from." He listens to others' music, but only to get him thinking about ideas, to "get me to where I'll find something on my own."

Beverly started playing piano at the age of five because, while he wanted an electric guitar, his dad thought he should try the piano first. (He didn't pick up the guitar until he bought himself one for his birthday in 1995.) By the time he came to Hampden-Sydney, he was a performer with a rich repertoire. The first musician to play in a dinner-and-music series at the College, he once discovered, with amazement, that "about 25 guys from Fiji" had come to Crawley Forum just to hear him play.

He has thought about pursuing a "real" job, the kind of meat-and-potatoes thing that most people end up doing, whether they like it or not. "But," he says, "I hope there's a reason for artists and musicians to add something to the lives of everybody else; the world needs music and art and books."

Several years ago, he figured out exactly what he was: a "leisure engineer," someone who helps others find ways of "spending their time in a way that will improve the quality of their lives. Whether I offer escapism or make them think about their lives, ideally, I'd be contributing something musically and still have a relatively normal existence. Out of all the pieces of life, that would be a pretty nice balance."

Beverly sees this balanced picture of his life composing itself in Southside Virginia. He loves the geographical area, its character, and its people. Besides, it's crossed by his favorite highway.

Sam Henry '94 (above left) and Butch Allen '94 dipped their bikes in the Pacific Ocean as they began their two-month cross-country trip for charity.

John Kincheloe '97 (right) stands with his bike in the Atlantic Ocean after pedaling across the United States.

A STRIDE A BIANCHI ROAD BIKE, laden with 40 pounds of camping and personal gear, John Kincheloe '97 of Culpeper spent last July and August forging his way from the Pacific coast of California to the Atlantic waters of Virginia Beach. "I had one more year of school," recalls Kincheloe, who had never undertaken more than a single-day bike trip, "and I thought this would be a great way to see the country." And see the country he did: 3410 miles of it, to be exact.

Along the way, Kincheloe says, he met plenty of people, visited some friends, and enjoyed the scenic diversity along the back roads of his route.

Facing the "typical knee jerk reactions" from his mother, Kincheloe finally eased his family's concerns and persuaded his employers, Culpeper Wood Preservers, to give him time off for the trip. He says he went alone because he "didn't know anyone else who wanted to go along"; then it became a cause: "I wanted to be able to say I did it by myself."

During the early stages of the trip, Kincheloe had to contend with 100-degree-plus temperatures in the California and Arizona deserts, vast stretches where water and supplies were in short supply. "Once I had to fill my bottles from a closed store's air-conditioner run-off," he recalls.

He spent about two months preparing for the trip, which was definitely worth the effort, he says, if only for "the feeling of freedom, of being on the open road with everything you need on your back."

BUTCH ALLEN '94 AND SAM HENRY '94 have been friends for years. When they were at Hampden-Sydney, Allen was president of Omicron Delta Kappa, the honorary leadership society, and Henry was vice president. They co-coached the rugby team. After graduation, they both went to Europe. Then they parted company. In 1994-95, Allen ran a program for inner-city kids in South-Central Los Angeles, and now teaches at Holy Cross School in New Orleans. Henry went off to Vail, Colorado, to hold several jobs there.

But they were so used to teamwork that when Allen had an idea, during their first Half-Iron-Man competition in the summer of 1996, to undertake a cross-country bicycle trip and raise money for charity, Henry supplied the charity (and another pair of legs for the work). Their ride from Oregon to Maine will help to support the "Meet the Wilderness" program, which gives at-risk kids from major cities a chance to hike, camp, and simply get outdoors—an idea that appeals to Allen because of his work with inner-city kids. "We've been bikers all our lives," says Allen of the 3,500-mile journey. "And we both like physical challenges. So sometime during that Half-Iron-Man last summer, this idea came together for us, and we decided to do some good with it."

Allen and Henry began the journey in May 1997 and will be in Maine, they hope, in August. They hope, too, that their "team" charity work will raise big money for a good cause.

The note about John Kincheloe is adapted, with permission, from an article by Vincent Vala in the Culpeper News.

How do your stock dividends compare with the yield of a Hampden-Sydney Gift Annuity?

"My gift annuity is a two-way street. I happened to have an asset at the time that fit right into the program.

It's a win-win situation. It gives me guaranteed income for life. I saved on capital gains and estate taxes.

More important, it does good things for Hampden-Sydney and will make a difference for the College and for future generations of students."

THE HONORABLE
JOHN M. HAMLET, JR. '31
Charlottesville, Virginia

Here is a chart of the yields of 20 of the more popular common stocks. Let's see how they compare with the guaranteed returns of gift annuities.

Many of us have stock that we purchased for its appreciation value. Through the years these stocks may have doubled or tripled in value.

Now, however, earning a higher rate of income and avoiding major capital gains taxes may be of greater importance to you than the appreciation. If this is your situation, the Development Office at Hampden-Sydney has a program that may meet your needs—a gift annuity.

The tax code allows for assets like stock to be given to nonprofit institutions like Hampden-Sydney, in what is referred to as a "life-income arrangement." Simply put, this means that donors give away the principal but retain the right to receive the income produced by it for the remainder of their life (or lives, in the case of a couple).

Funding a gift annuity usually brings you a significantly higher rate of return than your stock. It also generates a charitable deduction for your current income tax, while allowing you to avoid capital gains tax on the increased value of your stock. And while it gives you all those benefits, it has the added advantage of helping Hampden-Sydney continue its mission.

If you feel that a gift annuity might be of value to you, contact the Development Office toll-free at (800) 865-1776; ask for George Peters or Michael Degenhart. A confidential, detailed illustration can be prepared to show how a gift annuity would affect your specific situation. (This illustration is not intended as tax or legal advice; for that you should consult your own professional advisors.)

Call us today to find out how a gift annuity can help both you and the College.

“At Hampden-Sydney, our most important task other than teaching and learning is to continue to strengthen and improve our sense of direction for the future—our vision for the next five, ten, twenty-five years and beyond—as well as the strategy to support that vision in the troubled world of the twenty-first century.

And that highlights our critical need for resources. Money—the money to do the things we must do, if we are to continue to fulfill our promise of almost two and a quarter centuries ago, if we are to keep pace in the next century. You alumni, parents, and friends have dug down deep and helped us as you’ve never helped before.

For that we are profoundly grateful, and for that you should be proud as well. The return on your investment in our College, recall, is the “Hampden-Sydney Man”—the good man and good citizen, the bulwark of society that our pre-Revolutionary founders dreamed and talked about, the kind of man today’s society needs so desperately.”
